Miami blacks pelt Carter

Times News Services

MIAMI — President Carter's motorcade was pelted by bottles thrown by a mob of angry blacks Monday night as it left the Liberty City area swept by riots last month.

The president was not injured. He said later at Miami International Airport that he was unaware of the incident.

It was evident as Carter left the community centre where he had met Miami civic leaders that trouble was in the wind. The crowd of blacks outside began booing loudly as the president appeared and walked to his limousine under heavy Secret Service guard.

One beer bottle struck the armored limousine and other objects were thrown at the motorcade. Some of the objects were water-soaked wads of paper but more bottles struck vehicles behind Carter's.

It was the most visible and outspoken opposition Carter has faced in recent trips outside Washington.

Later, as he boarded Air Force One for a flight to Seattle, Carter was asked if he had been aware of the bottle-throwing. He replied, "No."

Earlier, at the meeting with civic leaders, Carter promised them, "I'll meet you at least half way...if you'll meet me the other half way."

The session in the cramped Liberty City community center, with booing pickets outside, contrasted with the first appearance of Carter's four-hour visit to Miami — a talk before a friendly audience in the splendor of a hotel ballroom across Biscayne Bay in Miami Beach.

St. Helens could be trigger for other volcanoes

Times News Services

Eruptions at other Pacific Northwest volcanoes may well follow the explosion of Mount St. Helens in Washington, the head of the U.S. Geological Survey said today.

USGS Director H. William Menard, testifying at Senate hearings in Washington, D.C., said eruptions at Mount St. Helens early in the 19th century were followed by activity at three other volcanoes — Mount Rainier and Mount Baker in Washington and Mount Hood in Oregon.

"It is possible the current Mount St. Helens eruption could signal the start of similar cycle of eruptions," Menard said.

Menard said Mount St. Helens was active between 1831 and 1857.

"The only prudent thing we can do now is to assume it will remain active for the same length of time," he said.

Meanwhile, scientists watching quiet Mount St. Helens are looking with trepidation toward Friday — the day a theory about the effects of the moon's gravity on volcanoes will be tested. And as luck would have it, it's also Friday the 13th.

On that day, the moon will be the closest to the earth since May 17, a few hours before the cataclysmic volcanic eruption that tore more than 1,300 feet off the top of the mountain.

Dr. Doug Johnson, a University of Washington geophysicist, is one of several scientists who say there is a possibility the moon's effect on earth tides could trigger another eruption.

Geologist Tim Hait of the U.S. Geological Survey says he has no evidence to show the mountain will change its current relatively calm appearance by Friday.

He said, however, there is always the possibility that the volcano's magma may build new explosive pressure and cause a blast.

Donal Mullineaux, considered one of the foremost volcano experts among the USGS crew, also said the tide could act as a triggering force. But, added Mullineaux, "we simply don't know."

"It doesn' matter to me that it's Friday the 13th. We're going to be watching just because we think the volcano is in an explosive mood and it's highly dangerous," Mullineaux said.

Seismic activity near the mountain was practically undetectable Sunday. Seismologists had to turn their machines up high to record faint tremors.

The Weyerhaeuser Company reported an "earthquake" at 4:10 a.m. PDT after loggers five miles east of Camp Baker said they felt the ground shaking, but University of Washington seismologists detected no noticeable change in activity.

The relative calm, the slight plume activity and evidence that some vegetation was springing back to life in the 150-square-mile blast area around the volcano were welcome signs.

Loggers were permitted inside the state's newly designated Red Zone extending 20 miles around the mountain for the first time Sunday after the state Department of Emergency Services granted firms single permits covering all their workers.

Weyerhaeuser, which owns thousands of acres around the mountain, and other logging companies have been anxious to enter the potentially dangerous area to salvage abandoned equipment, rebuild logging roads.

Meanwhile, Skamania and Cowlitz County coroners said they hoped to schedule hearings this week that eventually would lead to issuance of "certificates of presumptive death" for many persons missing.

Hydro backs off on 2,4-D plans

By BRENDA DALGLISH

B.C. Hydro has withdrawn its controversial application to use 2,4-D along its transmission lines between Sooke and Jordan River.

It was learned today Hydro has informed the B.C. Pesticide Control Branch it wants to "reassess" its application.

The notification is in a letter to be delivered to the branch later today from Peter Mosby, vegetation management supervisor for Hydro.

The request comes in the face of increasing protests from the community and a suggestion the utility be charged for including false information in its application.

A Hydro spokesman said vegetation in the area still needs to be controlled but the company wishes to take another look at the situation.

Four residents and the Sooke-Jordan River Chamber of Commerce were appealing Hydro's application. The appeal was to be heard by the Pesticide Control Branch appeal board at the Sooke Royal Canadian Legion Hall June 16 and 17.

Both groups were protesting what they considered false information in Hydro's application.

The residents, who live in the area to be treated, claim Hydro's information about setback from water intakes was wrong.

Opponents of the spraying suggested Hydro be prosecuted under the Pesticide Control Act which says intentionally making a false statement or misleading the administrator is punishable by a $2,000 fine or six months imprisonment or both.

The chamber protested the application because of what officials considered the false and insufficient information, and a number of other reasons.

The chamber wanted alternatives for brush and stump control examined.

Hydro's application called for 200 acres to be treated to control brush and stump growth by backpack sprayers from June 1, 1980, to March 31, 1981. The application said no more than 240 pounds of 2,4-D would be used.

Street level aid for dropouts

A $3,000 start on portable counselling of school dropouts was endorsed Monday by Greater Victoria school trustees.

The money will be used for a career counsellor and office accommodation, or a mobile van and counsellor to assist dropouts, school-aged youngsters in part-time work or on public assistance, and those on the loose such as street children.

"I think it's the first time the Victoria school district has got out of its shell to where the clients are," said superintendent Allan Stables, an originator of the plan.

The effect is to move school expertise to street level, rather than expect youngsters needing guidance to come to the administrative centre.

The summer downtown counselling project has the support of area police chiefs, Stables said. He indicted businessmen are also enthused and may be willing to subsidize it in some way such as through donated facilities.

A downtown centre was proposed to augment the district's telephone counselling service, which has been reasonably successful and which would be maintained through a downtown location.

Stables said the service would be aimed at youngsters who have drifted away from the school system in a variety of ways.

Garbo's kiss makes rose worth $1,650

SALISBURY, England (Reuter) — A faded yellow rose once kissed by Greta Garbo was sold at auction today for $1,650.

It was one of the cherished souvenirs of Sir Cecil Beaton, photographer of royalty and international celebrity, who died in January.

Swedish-born actress Greta Garbo, the love of his life, gave the rose to him in 1932. According to Beaton's published diaries, he vainly proposed marriage to her several times.

Ferry runs cut, delayed

A number of ferry sailings were cancelled and others delayed by an hour today as crew members joined other public sector employees in a protest of proposed pension plan changes.

There were six mid-day ferry sailings cancelled on the Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen run and two on the Horseshoe Bay-Departure Bay route. Six sailings on the latter route were delayed.

It was the second disruption of ferry service between Vancouver Island and the mainland in less than a week.

Last Friday, a protest rally was held in Nanaimo, and ferry sailings from Departure Bay were delayed.

Today's rally was held in Vancouver.

Municipal and provincial government offices were affected and liquor stores were closed for the afternoon in the Greater Vancouver area as employees left to attend the rally.

A similar rally is planned for next Monday in Victoria and it is expected the liquor stores will be closed here as well and there will be further ferry disruptions on the Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen run.

The public sector employees are protesting proposed amendments to pension statutes which would put an end to open-ended pension plan indexing.

Success or catastrophe: Trudeau

By DAN TURNER
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau offered his retirement as an incentive to overcoming Canada's constitutional quagmire Monday, but judging from the pronouncements of various premiers he may be in office for a long time to come.

Trudeau and the ten premiers met for seven hours behind closed doors in an attempt to get started on constitutional reform.

They emerged with a negotiating timetable aimed at a five-day first minister's conference to begin Sept. 8, but the most optimistic thing most of the premiers could say about the meeting was that there was a new sense of urgency about constitutional reform in the wake of the Quebec referendum.

Trudeau said he couldn't define whether the meeting had been a success or a failure.

"I almost feel like telling you it's not certain that everything will go as we all hope. It might be a monumental success or a catastrophic failure . . . it just depends on how much progress is made during the summer, and how it will be capped in September by the first ministers."

But deeply-held differences on the nature of confederation in general, and federal-provincial power-sharing in particular, remained as evident as ever, particularly on the part of Quebec Premier Rene Levesque and Newfoundland Premier Brian Peckford.

Equally obvious was a basic difference between Trudeau and most of his provincial counterparts on how to approach reform.

Trudeau was pushing for step-by-step progress that would begin with "building blocks" — such as a statement of fundamental principles, entrenchment of human rights and patriation of the constitution — while several premiers were holding out for quid pro quo bargaining every step of the way.

Referring to the 12 priority items laid down for negotiation over the next three months, Trudeau said "if we do reach agreement on all these things I would be very, very anxious to retire soon."

"Now that," he told reporters with a smile, "would be an incentive to a lot of people, I would think."

Trudeau said that if the first ministers could make progress on the whole package "that's fine and dandy," but hoped that if there were not that degree of success there would at least be progress on his "building blocks," or "package for the people."

Behind his stated hopes remains the veiled threat mentioned by several prominent members of his government during the last week — that if sufficient progress is not made Trudeau may attempt to push his own version of constitutional reform through Parliament and go to the electorate in a referendum.

Premier Richard Hatfield of New Brunswick described Levesque as positive and co-operative inside the meeting, but when the OTTAWA (CP) — Individuals who hook up unlicensed satellite earth stations will be overlooked during a crackdown on the illegal use of "deep-dish" antennas.

But those companies which violate regulations of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission by retransmitting satellite signals picked up by unlicensed earth stations in communities which receive other television signals could be fined as much as $25,000.

The CRTC reiterated that position, set out earlier by Communications Minister Francis Fox, in a news release Monday "in order to reduce the confusion arising out of reports" about the earth stations and possible prosecutions.

The issue grabbed the national spotlight recently when Science Minister Pat McGeer of B.C. set up an earth station on the lawn of the Legislative Buildings and picked up U.S. satellite signals, apparently contravening the terms of the licence granted his ministry.

McGeer argues that federal regulations preventing such practices should be changed.

Officials estimate there are at least 200 unlicensed earth stations, mostly in B.C. and the North, tapping U.S. satellites for a wide range of television programs, including first-run movies.

Most operate commercially or on a co-operative basis in poorly-served rural and remote regions, but there are a few individuals with their own dishes.

The CRTC says it's interested primarily in two types of operations:

— Licensed cable TV systems using earth stations without permission to pick programs off American satellites.

— Unlicensed operations retransmitting signals received from illegal earth stations into communities where other TV signals are available.

Its concern is not with earth stations as such but with the unlicensed operation of TV stations and cable TV systems, the CRTC said in the news release.

While the CRTC licenses broadcasting activities, the licensing of earth stations is done by the department of communications.

The department has refused to license any earth station to receive signals directly off foreign satellites. The Intelsat agreement between Canada and the U.S. prohibits either country from doing so.

Wharf charges give boaters no pleasure

A delegation of pleasure boat-owners who keep their craft at Fisherman's Wharf will attend Thursday evening's meeting of city council to seek support in their fight against the lack of a monthly moorage rate.

Between 100 and 150 people attended a special meeting in James Bay community school Monday night.

Victoria administered Fisherman's Wharf until May 31 but handed the operation back to Transport Canada June 1.

When the federal department took over, it dropped the monthly rate for pleasure boats and increased utility charges for garbage collection, power and water from 22 cents a day to $1:65 a day.

Michael Donnan, who owns a 40-foot pleasure craft, says he and his counterparts are prepared to pay a fair rate for utilities but are mainly concerned that they have no monthly rate.

Until Transport Canada took over, he had been paying $1 a foot for a monthly bill of $40. He now is faced with a monthly bill of $125 for moorage, plus $19.50 for utilities in a 30-day month and another $30 for parking.

Donnan says he and the rest of the group realize the city can do little but give moral support. However, they hope the council will back their petition to Transport Canada.

He says other public wharves in the area, operated by the department of fisheries, have monthly rates and charge much less.

Donnan says owners of pleasure craft pay 2½ times as much as commercial fishermen who keep their boats there. The commercial fishing boats have a monthly rate of 40 cents a foot.

He says it is unrealistic to compare the rates at Fisherman's Wharf with those of commercial marinas.

The power at Fisherman's Wharf is not sufficient to allow the use of an electric kettle. There is no permanent berthing and boats are often rafted two or three out.

Both the city and the department of fisheries, which administered Fisherman's Wharf before Victoria assumed the responsibility, had monthly rates for pleasure craft.

Unemployment rate rises, but fewer are out of work

OTTAWA (CP) — The number of persons unable to find work fell to 904,000 in May from 937,000 in April, Statistics Canada said today.

It was the second drop in the official jobless totals this year; the first was in April. Despite the decline in absolute terms, the seasonally-adjusted unemployment rate rose to 7.8 per cent from April's 7.5 per cent.

Provincially, British Columbia had the lowest increase — to 7.0 per cent from 6.9. The figures showed the unemployment rate in Victoria stood at 8.7, compared to 8.9 in April.

Statistics Canada reported that the labor force, which includes those working as well as those seeking work, was 11,516,000 up from 11,291,000 in April.

The seasonally-adjusted unemployment rate for men 15 to 24 increased to 14.4 per cent in May from 13.5 per cent in April; for women in the same age group, the rate rose to 12.9 per cent from 12.6 per cent.

The seasonally-adjusted rate, which takes into account special employment trends such as seasonal hiring patterns in certain industries, is designed to smooth out possible distortions in the statistics.

The rate for the least vulnerable group — men over 24 — rose to 4.9 per cent from 4.6; the rate for women in that age bracket increased to 7.0 per cent from 6.8.

Newfoundland continues to have the highest seasonally-adjusted unemployment rate, at 13.6 per cent, up from April's 13.3 per cent.

The only province where the rate decreased was Manitoba, where it fell to 5.7 per cent from 5.9.

The biggest increase in the unemployment rate occurred in New Brunswick, which jumped to 11.8 per cent from 10.7 per cent in April.

Alberta continued to have the lowest rate in the country with a rise to 3.8 per cent from 3.6 per cent in April.

Saskatchewan's rate was 4.0 per cent, up from 3.8; Quebec was at 9.7 per cent, up from 9.5.

Nova Scotia's rate rose to 10.3 per cent from 9.5; Ontario's rate was 7.6 per cent, up from 7.1; Prince Edward Island was 10.8 per cent in May, up from 10.3 per cent.

May is the first month for which Statistics Canada measures the unemployment rate for returning students — persons between the ages of 15 and 24 who attended school fulltime in March and who plan to return to school in the fall.

The unadjusted unemployment rate in May was 13.7 per cent, up from 13.3 per cent in May, 1979. The rate for students 15 to 19 was 12.0 per cent, up from 11.8 per cent last year and that for students between 20 and 24 was 19.8 per cent, up from 18.1 per cent a year ago.

Finance Minister Allan MacEachen has forecast a rise in the annual average unemployment rate to 8.0 per cent this year from 7.2 per cent in 1979 because of the economic slowdown caused by the recession in the United States.

The U.S. recession has taken hold quickly — the U.S. unemployment rate soared to 7.8 per cent in May from 7.0 per cent in April.

One in four rail cars defective

MISSISSAUGA, Ont. (CP) — One in four train cars inspected by the Canadian transport commission last fall had defects that had gone undetected by railway inspectors and could have caused serious accidents, a federal investigation into the Mississauga train derailment has been told.

John Gray, chairman of the railway transport committee, an arm of the transport commission, testified Monday that an inspection of 2,194 CP Rail cars showed that 27 per cent were defective, Gray said.

Asked by inquiry lawyer Robert Armstrong whether the "rather alarming" statistics indicated some problem with the railways maintenance and inspections program, Gray replied: "Something's amiss. It's quite a high percentage."

Buy a car, and get one free!

TORONTO (CP) — Buy one and get one free.

You mean a new car?

Yes, says Lincoln-Mercury dealer Martin Starr. He's offering to throw in a free 1980 Capri or Bobcat with the purchase of a 1980 Lincoln Town Car or Mark VI.

"There's no hokey-pokey," he said. "It's all above board. The new car market has been off a little bit."

Starr's list prices for the Lincolns range from $21,000 for a Continental Town Car two-door to $29,000 for the signature Mark VI four-door.

The list price for a Capri two-door is about $6,700 and the average list price for Bobcat models on the lot is $6,000.

Starr said he will "make a bit of money" on the deal if he sells all his Lincolns. He has 21 on the lot and the offer expires June 30.

B.C. man declared dead, comes back 25 years later

QUESNEL (CP) — A British Columbia man has returned from the dead — causing some interesting problems for his wife or widow.

As far as his wife Beatrice was concerned, Douglas Grant Larsen disappeared without a trace in the mid-1950s. When she wanted to remarry in 1963 and couldn't find Larsen to divorce him, she obtained a court order declaring him dead.

But Larsen was alive and well and living in Ontario. It wasn't until last year, after he had moved to Quesnel and proposed to another woman, that he learned he had been dead for several years.

Larsen, 48, paid income tax and had dealings with various levels of government in the 17 years he was supposed to have been pushing up daisies.

He applied to have the courts revoke the 1963 order, which they did Monday. A lawyer made the application on his behalf, because dead people can't correspond with the courts.

He was reluctant to discuss the case for personal reasons.

The court decision creates some problems for Beatrice. She has said "I do" twice since her union with Larsen, but now has discovered both trips to the altar were invalid.

She is living in Vancouver with her third husband and their seven-year-old daughter.

Ammonia spills in rail crash

TERRACE (CP) — Powdered ammonia spilled Monday night when four Canadian National Railways freight cars were derailed in the CN yard here.

Fire chief Cliff Best said a few cubic yards of the chemical leaked when the car carrying the ammonia was struck by another car carrying wheat.

No injuries were reported and Best said Transport Canada is checking on the ammonia because CN is not sure what kind it is or whether it is dangerous.

He said the fire department is treating the spill as though it were ammonia-sulphate. The chief said there was no immediate danger from the spill, but if the substance becomes wet it could give off fumes. Firemen are keeping the chemical dry and protected from heat or sparks.

The CN supervisor at the yard said the derailment occurred at about 9 p.m. when a rail in the yard broke while the train was rolling over it. Two other cars containing sulphur were also derailed but were no leaking, Best said.

One that got away

NANAIMO (CP) — Sport fishermen Ted Owens knows all about the one that got away.

Owens hooked a spring salmon which he figured to be more than 10 pounds Sunday and hustled it over to the official weigh-in station for the Nanaimo School District's annual fishing derby.

Science teacher Larry Smith was hoisting the prize specimen onto the scales when he dropped it and watched it slide off the wharf, and into about six metres of water where the crabs had a feed.

Despite Smith's gaffe, officials took pity on Owens and awarded him first prize. The largest fish that didn't get away was only six pounds.

Videotaping impaired given mixed reviews

VANCOUVER (CP) — Prosecutors are giving mixed reviews on the use of videotape cameras to gain evidence in drinking-and-driving cases.

Those contacted Monday agreed the candid-camera-type operation is likely having an impact as a deterrent. But by the time a case reaches court, use of videotape evidence appears to have limited use.

An experimental project was started in Vernon nearly two years ago in which motorists suspected of being impaired were filmed while doing balance and co-ordination tests. The visual evidence was later shown suspects to convince them of their condition at the time. If necessary, it could be used later in court.

Since then, the project has been extended to several Vancouver-area municipalities and to six cities in other areas.

Officials in the attorney-general's office now are trying to assess the data from the first projects. A spokesman said prosecutors are happy with videotape cameras but suggest selective use.

The project was aimed at saving court time and money by encouraging more guilty pleas.

Vancouver has had 75 cases using videotape. But chief prosecutor Bruce Donald has noticed no great change in the number of cases where there is a guilty plea. He said it was too soon to tell if there is a cost benefit.

Bob Lemiski, chief prosecutor in Burnaby, where suspects also have been videotaped since last November, said: "It might be good to scare them (drinking drivers) into better driving. But it results in a minimal contribution at the court stage."

Vernon prosecutor Bob Moffat said he knew of several cases where, just before the trial, a suspect changed his plea to guilty after seeing his videotaped tests. He saw the greatest benefit as deterrence rather than evidence.

Fishermen reject salmon price offer

VANCOUVER (CP) — Union fishermen have voted 94 per cent to reject an industry offer on salmon prices, Bill Procopation, business agent for the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, said Monday.

The UFAWU and the Native Brotherhood had recommended their 5,000 members reject the deal because the Fisheries Association of B.C., representing processors, had offered prices lower than the minimum for some species last year.

The association offered 80 cents a pound for sockeye salmon, which the union says is down from $1.05 a pound last year and 68 cents a pound for coho, down from 72 cents last year.

The union said association members have enjoyed revenue increases of between 15 per cent and 34 per cent on all species.

Procopation said both sides had expressed optimism an agreement could be reached before the salmon season opens later this month.

Weyerhaeuser planning reforestation research

VANCOUVER (CP) — Weyerhaeuser Canada Ltd. is going ahead with a $4.2-million forest regeneration and research centre in the north Okanagan.

The project was jointly announced Monday by Forests Minister Tom Waterland and Weyerhaeuser Canada Ltd. president Dave McInnes. About 12 million seedlings a year eventually will be grown at the facility, which will employ 12 to 16 full-time staff and 60 to 80 seasonal workers.

A 252-acre site at Grandview Flats between Armstrong and Vernon, will include a nursery.

A political paradox

Premier Bill Bennett probably has mixed feelings about the enormous and almost immediate popularity of the ombudsman's office.

It was he and his Social Credit government who initiated the Ombudsman Act back in 1977 and saw it through with appointment of Dr. Karl Friedmann as the ombudsman in July, 1979.

To the government's credit, the act was hailed as one of the best ombudsman statutes in the world. It gave the ombudsman's office liberal powers of investigation and wide discretion in determining what information would be made public. All agencies governed by provincial act could eventually come under its scrutiny.

Both the legislation and the appointment of Friedmann were passed unanimously, an uncommon event in the B.C. Legislature.

The ombudsman opened the phone lines October 1 to residents who felt they had been unjustly treated by any one of a hundred bureaucracies.

About 400 complaints were expected to arrive between October 2 and December 31. The ombudsman office was budgetted and staffed accordingly.

However, more than 900 complaints were received. According to Friedmann, his office has become tangled in the same bureaucratic red tape and delays that bring him so many customers.

The original projections for 1980 have been revised upward. Instead of 1,500 complaints, the ombudsman expects between 2,500 and 3,000. It's an overwhelmingly popular venture by any politican's standards, but it would be understandable if the government were less than ecstatic. After all, the list of complainants would be far shorter if the ministries and their agencies were models of efficiency.

Friedmann has asked the government for the money to hire 10 or 12 additional staff members. The request could be denied and the ombudsman left overwhelmed and ineffective by the mounting paper on his desk. Many of the government's inadequacies would never be addressed.

But because the government put him in business in the first place, the request really should be approved. We will understand if it is done without great fanfare.

Wait for the strike

Psychological warfare is what fishing is all about. The right lure, bait and depth are all necessary to get the fish on the hook. Once the hook is set, it's a matter of careful reeling.

Psychological warfare is also one way of intrepreting the Canada-United States fish negotiations on the east coast. Canadians did a good job in selecting the lure. A treaty was negotiated that our east coast fishermen found acceptable, even delightful. The problem, it seems, is that they started reeling before the hook was set.

Now that Canadian-American negotiations have reopened on the west coast, our fishermen should learn a subtle psychology lesson from their Maritime peers.

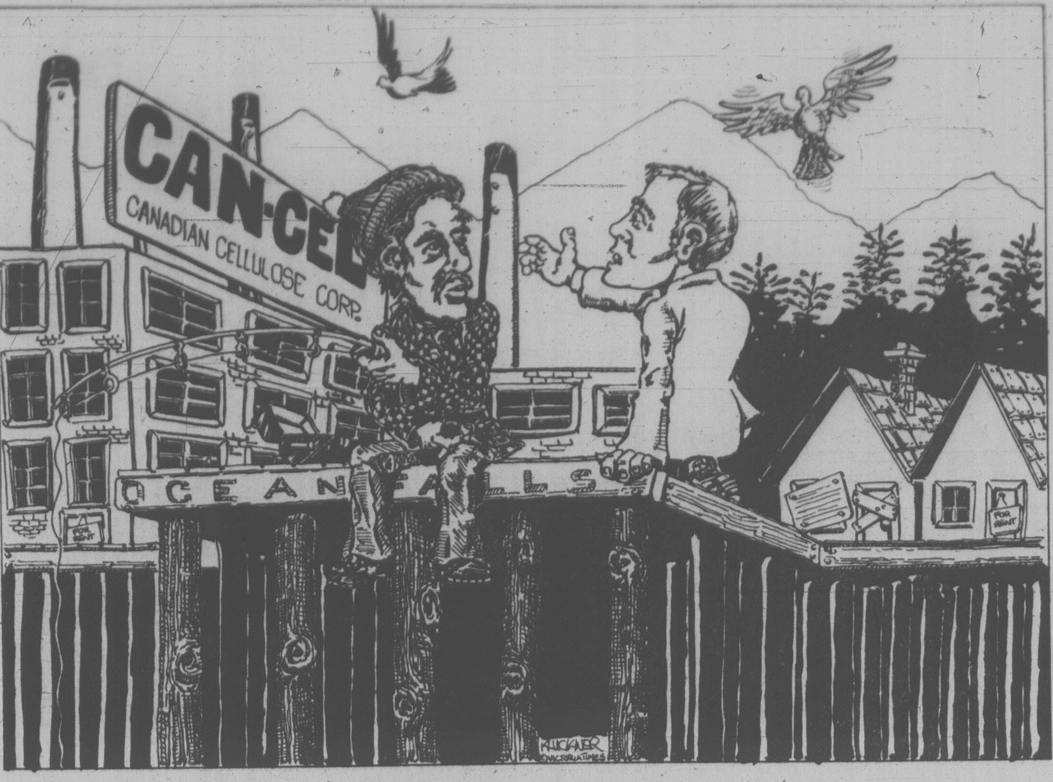
The east coast treaty, signed more than a year ago after 18 months of negotiations, has been held up in U.S. Senate committee hearings. New England state senators, fishermen and fish processors are upset over the way the Georges Bank between Nova Scotia and Maine has been divided between the two countries. President Carter supports the treaty, but has been unable to shepherd it through the Senate.

According to observers, the Americans were deeply suspicious about the East Coast agreement because Canadian fishermen appeared to be well pleased with the deal.

Here on the west coast, the interception of salmon reared in the other country's waters has been a sore spot for years. Each country claims the other has been overfishing its stocks.

A confrontation at Dixon Entrance off the north coast earlier this spring showed what can happen when this animosity is left to run its course. Canadians, worried that Alaskans were overfishing one species, began overfishing American-reared salmon. Such displays of non-cooperation only jeopardize a valuable renewable resource.

With any luck, Canadian and American negotiators will this time hammer out a new agreement for the west coast. But if an agreement is reached, and Canadian fishermen like it, they must pretend otherwise. They must wait until the hook sets in Washington before reeling.



"... is that their name or their policy?"

Liberal manifesto divisive

OTTAWA — The Liberal Party is rolling into next month's crucial general convention with wooing words for the West and a time bomb tucked under the red carpet.

The bomb is a potentially-explosive 75-page discussion paper, obtained by FP News Service, that has been prepared under the guise of detailing Liberal principles, history and long-range goals for the rest of the century. Its creators hope that the 2,000 delegates at the July 4-6 convention in Winnipeg will mull it and amend it and then adopt it at a later gathering as the Liberal Party Manifesto.

This is a first. The Liberals — like the federal Tories — have never bothered to codify their goals into one lump. That is a tradition restricted largely to European parties and the New Democrats.

Left leaning

It may also, however, be a last. The party is in a conciliatory, mildly optimistic mood. Alberta and Ontario may even be on the brink of a compromise resolution on oil prices which recognizes that the domestic price must bear some relation to the Chicago price. Liberals are revelling in their return to power. And into this gung-ho atmosphere comes a serious discussion paper that leans to the left and that asks delegates to codify such hard Liberal election stands as made-in-Canada oil prices.

Imagine the situation. Since the previous gathering in February, 1978, the party has been pitched out of and then back into power. Constitutional talks are looming, oil price negotiations are reaching fever pitch and the West has supplied only two seats for the Liberal majority government.

So at this convention, everyone wants to reduce the tensions, mollify the West and patch together workable legislative goals for the next four years. No one wants unseemly squabbles. But now they may not have a chance to dodge the argument.

The agenda also includes the election of party officials, constitutional amendments and that tedious but all-important task of sorting through the potpourri of provincial resolutions to achieve a national policy consensus.

The main electoral fight for the presidency is between backroom policy expert Martin O'Connell, a former Ontario cabinet minister, and organizational wizard Norman MacLeod, the Ontario party president. The two are running neck and neck. That contest has almost obscured the fact that four Liberals are trying to replace the discussion paper's creator, feisty Montreal MP Celine Payette, as party policy chairman. Many Liberals are privately betting that if Payette loses this race, her paper will be quietly shelved before the 1983 get-together.

On the surface, the discussion paper shouldn't get anyone excited. It's suitably vague and marvellously idealistic and it merely says what should be done — and not how anyone should go about doing it. It was hammered out in less than three months by the dynamic Payette with help from provincial party officials across the nation.

But the stress is undeniably on the left-wing goals of the party. The paper knocks critics of increased social security payments and asks Liberals to look for ways to "eliminate the unacceptable level of poverty and insecurity in our system." It zeroes in on the spectre of foreign ownership, citing the figures and fretting about the consequences. It repeats Trudeau's election call for a made-in-Canada oil price with no reference to world prices. And it strongly affirms the federal right to step in and control oil pricing and supply.

SHIRLEY MCLOUGHLIN
. . . flesh out manifesto

These have been Liberal policies and concerns for decades. The discussion paper contains no surprises as it wanders from the eloquent to the obvious. But the choice for policy emphasis on the convention floor has already raised a few hackles.

Many disaffected Liberals charge that Payette hatched the manifesto scheme just when the party's election platform committee was disbanding last February. They say that she almost singlehandedly decided to create the paper and that — because of time restrictions — she had little time to consult the grassroots. Officials in Trudeau's office are at pains to stress that the paper has no official blessing and that it is merely up for mulling.

Payette retorts that she had full talks with policy people: "This is over no one's dead body." She says that the paper stresses the Canadian angle in every problem, including oil prices. And she says that implementation methods are avoided "since you don't ask a philosopher if you can get through your daily life better with Chargex or Mastercharge."

Some Liberals welcome her approach as a chance to clear the air. "It's just a skeleton that we're going to put some flesh on," says British Columbia president Shirley McLoughlin. "We've never had our policy in one package before and I don't see any harm in it — if we go in looking at the broader picture, it will be a good exercise but if we have some nitpickers . . .."

Other party loyalists are far less content. A key Western organizer groans: "I'm just not enamoured of the whole manifesto process.

"Even if it is pretty watered down, the whole leftward drift is going to cause fights and we just don't need those kind of fights — especially when there are already provincial resolutions to which most people have agreed just to avoid those fights."

A key Ontario organizer adds: "I'm very much afraid that the press is going to have a field day with us."

West outnumbered

"Ontario and Quebec outnumber the West at this convention so if any of the tricky parts come to a vote, we'll offend the very groups we want to please," the organizer says. "This takes firmer positions than the provincial resolutions from what I can tell.

"Why do this now? Why set it up so that the very groups you want to pay attention to don't have a hope. I hope we can quietly shuffle it aside."

Six representatives from each of the four Western provinces are meeting this weekend in Regina to try to concoct a joint position on Payette's offering. If they can succeed, they may try to fold their views into the paper before it reaches the floor. Whatever the result, there's bound to be some fancy lobbying on the July convention floor to make sure that the public sees "useful discussions" and not "bitter squabbling."

TOM WICKER

Little point to 'Gunsmoke'

NEW YORK — The most important difference between President Carter and Edward Kennedy, says Carter, is that he won't agree to the debate that has become such a strange obsession with the senator.

This refusal might nevertheless be a miscalculation on the president's part, since Kennedy has promised to release his delegates to vote as they please if such a debate is held before the Democratic convention. Besides, Carter is beginning to look like a none-too-artful dodger, having already pulled out of a scheduled three-way debate with Kennedy and Jerry Brown in Iowa, then announcing in advance that he would not permit Rep. John Anderson to take part in the presidential debates next fall.

Kennedy already has laid on Carter the warning Joe Louis once issued to Billy Conn: "He can run but he can't hide" (although the senator misattributed it to Muhammad Ali).

Major factor

Unfortunately, such debate "news" seems to be dominating this campaign already, and it seems glumly predictable that televised debates, whether two or three or more-cornered, will again be a — perhaps the — major factor in the election. Here's one voice taking the negative on that prospect.

Not that it will do any good. With Kennedy challenging the president to debate, Carter turning his back on him and on Anderson, Ronald Reagan saying he'll take on all comers, Barry Commoner proposing seven debates on seven issues (with Commoner, the candidate of the Citizens Party, participating, of course), 53 percent of the people saying in a national poll that they want Anderson included in the prospective Reagan-Carter debates, and the League of Women Voters already planning the combat, debates obviously lie ahead. In fact, debates and the "debate issue" have become a standard feature of the media politics by which we now elect presidents.

The reason is not hard to find. These splashy confrontations are ideal for television, which so superbly depicts action and conflict. At least the first time around, the viewing public looks upon the "debate" as a shoot-out from "Gunsmoke"; and for at least one or two evenings almost the entire national attention is focused on the confrontations. That creates the impression that the debates are the campaign.

For the candidates, that means that these few hours eyeball to eyeball are insanely pressure-packed, an intense concentration of the whole campaign into a relatively brief moment of trying to face down an opponent with millions of voters at ringside. The "winner" emerges not from the substantive value of anything said, but from irrelevant impressions — Carter lost his first match with Gerald Ford, by common consent, because Ford appeared more aggressive and less nervous; but Carter took the second heat — and probably the presidency — because of Ford's single blunder in stating that the Soviet Union did not dominate Eastern Europe. Is this any way to choose a leader?

Such obvious pressures guarantee that the "debates" are concerned, most of all, with visual impact (his 5 o'clock shadow doomed Richard Nixon in 1960), confident mannerisms (he knew, Nixon later said of his third debate with John Kennedy, that he "had to be sincere"), slick debating points, exaggerated positions and the facile use of dubious evidence.

All that leads in turn to the most serious criticism of these extravanganzas — that they do not, as claimed, focus attention on the issues. To the contrary, as staged between Carter and Ford (I wrote at the time) "the televised debates afforded the two candidates opportunity to make more misrepresentations, false claims, calculated appeals and empty promises than probably ever were offered so directly to a long-suffering electorate."

The Republican candidate forums televised earlier this year were not notably of greater intellectual distinction, but the multi-candidate format at least eliminated the worst of the shoot-out tensions. And there is more to be said for thus widely exposing the manners and talents — if any — of a group of relatively unknown candidates than for matching up the survivors of 35 primaries like a pair of well-drilled gunslingers.

Limit candidates

In 1976, moreover, the debates became one more instrument — like the ballot and campaign finance laws — for shutting out of consideration a major independent candidacy, that of Eugene McCarthy. If Carter has his way, that will happen again in the case of Anderson, thus helping to build in the Republicans and Democrats as official, government-financed parties, precisely at the moment when television has made American political parties less relevant and useful than at any time since Thomas Jefferson invented them.

But if, as appears inevitable, the campaign is to be centered again on televised debates, publications and broadcasters ought at least to reconsider their reporters' participation as inquisitors — particularly if, as in 1976, the candidates are allowed a degree of veto power over their selection. Even if not, reporters should not be participants but observers, as they would be at any other campaign event.

Outstanding band

At a time when there is so much ugliness, slovenliness and strife in this world it is nice to be able to write about something really good.

I refer to the Oak Bay Senior Marching Band in the May 31 parade, and would like to commend them for their appearance, musical performance and marching that would gladden a Sergeant-Major's eyes . . . and ears.

As a school band I would say they are outstanding. — P.H.R. Rogers, 308-2125 Oak Bay Avenue.

Careful planning

Realization of adequate convention and conference facilities for this area is going to be difficult under the best of circumstances. The need for extreme haste is gone by about 30 years, so now the wisest course is to make sure of the very careful planning and proper financing that are essential to the success of the centre, both now and over many years.

Those involved in current promotion and planning of a centre are to be thanked for opening the eyes of the community to the whole proposition. The centre is a vital necessity if Victoria and the Saanich Peninsula are merely to survive, let alone become fully viable, as a practical site for major meetings. This is going to take the combined best brains, imagination, financial wizardy and management that can be brought to bear on this isue at all levels. Where there is the will there is a way and, if full support of all parties is applied, the many talents needed for this project are amply available locally and in the B.C. government.

Location is of prime importance. Waterfront is not essential, in fact is undesirable because of limited space. What is needed is a large tract of land that will permit sensible and attractive siting of the centre. Building plans should encompass more than one stage of development, with growth based on success and experience. Landscaped adjacent area should be enticing to those attending meetings (gardens, pools, etc.). Accessibility to hotel accommodation is taken for granted and associated transportation is essential.

Building and equipping the centre in proper and fully competitive fashion is an unavoidable high cost. Unless the big investment is made, however, the returns in every way may be a catastrophe. The convention and conference business is fiercely competitive and any facility that does not measure up to the expectations of meeting planners and to those who make management decisions is doomed from the start. — George I. Powell, 110-1680 Poplar Street.

Help veterans

I have come to an awareness in the last year which makes me ashamed of our country. This shame is to do with the treatment of the veterans.

These gallant men who gave up so much so that we may now enjoy the affluence of our nation are being very sadly forgotten in the bureaucracy of our government.

We may in many ways owe these men our lives and they deserve the best treatment.

I know personally of men who have applied to have their pension status increased, have waited a year for an answer only to be declined.

Where is the justice when our government is giving away our money in so many inappropriate ways as if there is no tomorrow. I would like to hear how our great leaders can justify this to the people of Canada.

I would also like to know if there are any other people out there who share my concern (and I'm talking about the young, strong ones).

In numbers we can change this. This may be our "last stand" for them. — Cheryle White, 3353 Wascana Street.

Equal footing

Canada's form of government is not a federation but a confederation in which the sovereign provinces surrendered temporarily certain powers to the government in Ottawa. These can be repossessed at any time resulting in secession. The federal form of government is the permanent loss of sovereign powers by the provinces while certain powers can be temporarily granted to the provinces.

The Confederate form of government in America prior to 1860 proved so unworkable that war resulted with federal union government imposed.

Canada is now facing the same problems in an age when civil war is unthinkable. The government in Ottawa wants more powers while the provinces refuse to give up their powers and want more.

Historial precedent points to a solution whereby the collecting of income tax and all direct taxes should revert again to the provinces, as in Quebec, as laid down in the British North America Act. This would enable the provinces to negotiate on an equal footing with Ottawa to help solve conflicting demands. — H. S. Thuillier, 2424 Beach Drive.

Soviets take lead in education

By DANIEL S. GREENBERG
The Washington Post

Americans who monitor Soviet education are reporting extraordinary accomplishments there from a decade-long drive to provide all high school students with extensive, super-enriched training in mathematics and science. It's so successful, they're saying, that the American high school system has been rendered primitive by comparison.

Though there can be a lot of slack in the linkage between national power and scientific literacy, interest is compelled by the Soviet commitment to make virtually all its young people go through mathematical and scientific training of a duration and intensity that relatively few Americans experience. For example, while calculus has almost disappeared from the American high school curriculum — only about 100,000 students a year take it - all Soviet high school students get two years of calculus, and about 97 per cent of Soviet youngsters now finish high school.

According to one of the leading American observers of Soviet education, Izaak Wirszup, professor of mathematics at the University of Chicago, the new Soviet science education represents a break with the old lock-step, imagination-dulling methods that have been widely blamed for Soviet science's relatively poor standing in world-class research. "These changes," Wirszup says in an unpublished report to the National Science Foundation, "are tantamount to an educational mobilization of the entire population." Of particular importance, he notes, is that the reformed scientific training is characterized "by an unexpected turn toward the individual and the development of his ability to do independent, creative work."

If that's so, and if it eventually takes hold in the actual conduct of scientific research, then the Soviet scientific community may be on its way to shaking off a well-earned reputation as a sluggish giant. The Soviets are aware of the relatively low productivity of their scientific enterprise and, as Wirszup points out, have given a high priority to expansion and reform of a school system that has been identified as a major bottleneck in the modernization of the Soviet economy.

The Soviets, he states, gave a great deal of authority for curriculum reform to their leading mathematicians and educational researchers. The result, he continues, "is a program for mathematics instruction that is modern in content, innovative in approach, well integrated and highly sophisticated. It gives strong emphasis to theoretical foundations and logical rigor as well as to applications . . . Moreover, the extraordinary Soviet research in psychology and methods of learning and teaching mathematics has been applied to the new curriculum, which now surpasses in quality, scope and range of implementation that of any other country."

Wirszup, who is an internationally recognized authority on Soviet computer technology and mathematics education in the Eastern bloc, added in his report that the Soviet effort amounts to "a concerted drive to produce mass education of unmatched quality."

For those many Americans who take a peculiar pride in acknowledging scientific ignorance, the differences that Wirszup tabulated in standard Soviet and American high school programs are likely to be quite startling. He reports, for example, that a Soviet high school student is required to complete five years of physics, four years of chemistry, one year of astronomy, five and one-half years of biology, and so on down a list that would empty America's high schools via the dropout route. Wirszup concludes: "The disparity between the level of training in science and mathematics of an average Soviet skilled worker or military recruit and that of a non-college-bound American high school graduate, an average worker in one of our major industries, or an average member of our all-volunteer army, is so great that comparisons are meaningless."

Finally, he observes that while the remaking of the Soviet education system has hit some snags and stirred up pedagogical controversies, the Soviets feel they're on the right track and continue to invest vast resources in what they themselves describe as an "educational revolution." As for the students, they are lured on, Wirszup states, by the realization that "educational achievement . . . is practically the only safe avenue to a more comfortable standard of living under Soviet conditions."

Wirszup's findings, along with continuing reports of slumping standards and student achievements in American high school science and math programs, contributed to a White House request in February for the Department of Education and the National Science Foundation to collaborate on a report, due this month, on science and engineering education in the United States.

Of the many shortages now confronting the United States, it may be that the intellect shortage is the most dangerous.

State secrets: Kissinger reveals double standard

By ANTHONY LEWIS
New York Times

KISSINGER . . . public deceived

In the foreword to White House Years Henry Kissinger wrote: "Treatment of classified materials in this book has been worked out with the office of the national security adviser, Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski, to whom I express my appreciation." The acknowledgment seemed routine. It was not.

The passage caught the eye of a publisher, Robert L. Bernstein, president of Random House. He wrote Brzezinski and asked "how the clearing of the Kissinger book was actually accomplished." The staff secretary of the National Security Council, Christine Dodson, replied:

"Prior to the publication of his book Dr. Kissinger forwarded to Dr. Brzezinski's office a very small part of the manuscript then prepared, in the form of disconnected brief excerpts. These excerpts were reviewed for possible classification problems; they were edited to indicate what we would require to clear the publication of those excerpts.

"The edited manuscript was returned and further oral comments were made to a member of Dr. Kissinger's staff to the effect that after the required changes, we were clearing what we saw and that NSC clearance of the book would have to await a review of the total manuscript.

"Dr. Kissinger never submitted any further materials for review. It is our judgment, therefore, that the passage you quote from the book's foreword vastly overstates, at least by implication, the degree of classification review to which the book was subjected by Dr. Brzezinski's office."

Government employees do not usually use language as colorful as "vastly overstates" in official correspondence. Evidently the National Security Council staff, and perhaps Brzezinski, felt that they had been used. They resented Kissinger's bland little effort to deceive the public into believing that his use of classified material in the book had their official approval.

The interesting point in the episode is what it shows about the disparate treatment of former government officials who write books about their experience. Robert Bernstein was curious about the handling of classified material in the Kissinger book because of what had happened to one of his authors, Frank Snepp. The contrast was staggering.

Kissinger, who had been privy to the highest secrets in the American system, made wholesale use of classified documents in his book. Some experts say that it discloses more current or recent national security material than any ever published.

As Miss Dodson's letter indicates, the government was given a chance to make only a partial judgment on small portions of the manuscript. What was used was largely Kissinger's unilateral decision. Yet he has not been denounced by any official for allegedly compromising national security. He has not been sued. No court has lectured him. And he is expected to make more than $5 million on the book.

Frank Snepp was a line Central Intelligence Agency officer in Vietnam. Afterward he wrote a book, Decent Interval, criticizing American policy at the end of the war. Because he did not show the manuscript to the agency, as he had promised to do, the government sued him for damages. It did not allege that he had disclosed any classified information at all. But it said the precedent of publishing without approval was dangerous.

The Supreme Court found that Snepp had violated a "fiduciary obligation" to show officials his manuscript — an obligation arising not from his promise but from the secret nature of his work. Without giving Snepp's lawyers a chance to argue the point, the court summarily decided that the government was entitled to take all of Snepp's earnings on the book, about $140,000.

If the law declared by the Supreme Court in the Snepp case applies to anyone else, it surely must apply to Henry Kissinger. Hardly anyone had greater access to secrets and hence had a greater "fiduciary obligation" to show the government his manuscript — all of the manuscript — before publication.

Here is a chance for the Justice Department to collect upwards of $5 million. Will it sue Kissinger? I think we shall wait a long time until either the department or the Supreme Court treat Kissinger as they do the powerless Frank Snepps of this world.

There is also an important historical point about the treatment of classified material in White House Years, a point made by Theodore Draper when he reviewed the book for the quarterly Dissent. On inquiry at the State Department, Draper found that Kissinger's quotations from secret documents had been declassified — but only those quotations, not the entire documents. Thus no one else could see the context of these passages to judge whether Kissinger had dealt with the material fairly.

"This system is a political and intellectual outrage," Draper wrote. "It enables political figures to control the history of their own deeds or misdeeds. No partial quotation can be properly understood without its context.

"What is declassified for one should be declassified for all. Whether or not the present declassification system is good or bad is not here the question; the real issue is whether government officials should be permitted to make a mockery of it."

Going forth into the world

Russell Baker

I have the pictures here. Notice the light: the greens so green, the day so gold, the sun so lovely filtering through the spreading boughs of the ancient campus oak. Or was it the ancient campus elm? Hmm. Looks like an ancient campus horse chestnut. Ah well, memory plays tricks. It's not important.

Those are the graduates there. See how tall they stood. "The graduates stood tall in the sunlight," the Alumni Bulletin wrote afterward. And this picture shows them sitting short in the shade. The Alumni Bulletin didn't mention that, but they did it, and were grateful for the opportunity, too, I tell you, because it was hot on the campus that day standing tall in the sunlight.

This one shows the parents being proud. The fellow right there is Waldemar Pascal, who won the prize for being the proudest parent of the day. President Ponhoss made the presentation from the platform. A boxed edition of Horace's odes. In Latin.

Actually this was a mistake. Horace's odes were supposed to go to Wilma Hepplewhite for leading her class in odes, and the Proudest Parent of the Day Award was supposed to be a boxed edition of Henry Kissinger, but Henry Kissinger objected to being boxed — in that heat, who could blame him? — so President Ponhoss had to give Horace's odes to Waldemar Pascal.

This is a picture of Wilma right here, telling President Ponhoss what she thinks of him, and this shows President Ponhoss telling Wilma to take her seat immediately and be quiet or she will have to stay after commencement and clap the erasers.

Now the man here with his jaw pushed right up into Waldemar Pascal's chin is Herb Musketoon. He is telling Pascal that he, Musketoon, has been discriminated against because of his ethnic background — Musketoon is from Canada — and that he is the one who should have gotten the prize because he is twice as proud as Waldemar Pascal.

This shot shows President Ponhoss telling Herb Musketoon to shut up and go stand in the sunlight. The man and woman crying in the background are Mr. and Mrs. Frances Quiltbottom. Their son, Petros, had just informed them that he planned to stay in college for another three years of graduate school.

Carlton Cavendish Carlton delivered the commencement address. Here he is with his mouth open telling the graduates to go forth into the world. Look closely behind Carlton there and you'll see a man in robes thumbing his nose at Carlton's back. That's old Charlie Snade, the dean of engineering.

* * *

And this is old Charlie at President Ponhoss' lunch afterward, telling Carlton he ought to go forth into the world himself instead of spending his life making commencement speeches.

The police-station shot here shows President Ponhoss bailing Farley Abthorp out of the local slammer, the night before commencement. Farley is the distinguished poet of the same name who was on campus to get an honorary degree, got tiddly on California sherry and was arrested for trying to molest Hortense Caxton, the professor emeritus of copyright infringement.

Barney Simcox, who in the 1960s defended the Berkeley 11, the Penn Five, the Cornell Nine and the Wesleyan One against charges of vandalizing physics professors, showed up at the request of campus radical Flora (The Red) Sheroo. Here's a snapshot of Barney's news conference. That's Barney accusing the graduates of being quiet.

Note, in the background, Flora Sheroo trying to rally a large group of quiet graduates to burn their diplomas. And here we see the result. The big fellows threatening to break diplomas on the heads of Barney and Flora are Wally and Merton Bapple. Wally and Merton are trustees of the university in charge of fund raising. Actually, they are just trying to clear a path through Barney and Flora for Wilbur Crisp (back to camera), the multi-millionaire head of Dynamic Consolidated.

Wilbur Crisp was there to get an honorary degree and decide whether Dynamic Consolidated should grant the university a large research contract or let it go bankrupt.

This picture shows President Ponhoss giving Wilbur Crisp a boxed edition of The Iliad in Greek. And this one, taken at the buffet in the president's mansion later, shows Mr. Crisp asking Mrs. Crisp whether he ought to let Presidet Ponhoss end up in a bread line.

And here is a beauty. All the graduates going forth into the world, except for Petros Quiltbottom (far right), who is playing tickle-and-slap with the secretary to the dean of the graduate school. Notice the beautiful quiet, the solemnity, the little beads of unemployment terror on President Ponhoss' brow.

New York Times

We're tightening up on people who abuse Unemployment Insurance.

Most people getting unemployment insurance play by the rules. But some people don't seem to know that they can't take a job and collect benefits without telling us they're working. That's why employers are being asked to send us the starting date and Social Insurance Number or extracts from computer payroll tapes for each employee they hire or rehire. This information is cross-checked with the Social Insurance Numbers of people receiving unemployment insurance benefits. Only cases of potential abuse will ever surface. After investigation, anyone found receiving benefits to which they are not entitled will have to repay them.

Why better control is needed.

Last year, Unemployment Insurance paid out $4 billion to help people between jobs. This included overpayments to people who took a new job while still receiving UI benefits, but failed to report their earnings.

When people collect unemployment insurance benefits they're not entitled to, overpayments result. It may be an honest mistake. Some people forget or don't understand they must tell Unemployment Insurance and report their total earnings when they start a new job. In that case, repayment is all that is required. But, a penalty or prosecution may follow when the new system detects people wrongly collecting benefits.

If you are collecting unemployment insurance benefits and start a new job, please say so on your UI claimant report card.

The Toronto stock market was mixed in active mid-afternoon trading today.

Trading in shares of Canray Resources Ltd. resumed after a brief halt and by 2 p.m. the stock was down 15 cents to $2.90.

Trading in shares of Q.M.G. Holdings Inc., which was also halted briefly, resumed at 1:30 p.m. and by 2 p.m. the stock was down ¾ to $6⅛.

Q.M.G. Holdings said a well it has drilled in Burleson County, Tex., has the potential to produce 342 barrels of oil and 10,000 cubic feet of natural gas a day. Q.M.G. has a 15-percent working interest in the well. Canray is also a participant.

Among industrials, Falconbridge Nickel fell 2¼ to $103¾, Cara Operations 1 to $17, Markel Financial ⅞ to $6⅛, Noranda Mines ⅛ to $25⅛ and Bell Canada ⅛ to $20⅝.

Dome Petroleum gained 2⅛ to 79⅛, Imperial Oil A 1½ to $41, George Weston 1¼ to $25¼, Seagram Co. 1 to $64 and IBM 1 to $66.

Vancouver

Prices were up in heavy trading today on the Vancouver Stock Exchange. Volume at 11 a.m. PDT was 2,801,432 shares.

Of the stocks that traded, 106 advanced, 195 declined and 171 remained steady.

B.C. Resources Investment Corp. led trading in the industrials, dropping .07 to $6.05 on 32,240 shares and Daon Development Corp. was steady at $7½ on 5,100. Proflex Ltd. was steady at .24 on 2,000 and Great National Land gained .05 to $1.10 on 900. Ardiem Industrial Corp. advanced .01 to .22 and Canadian Javelin Ltd. was unchanged at $1.30.

On the resource and development board, Enex Resources Ltd. dropped .10 to $1.60 on 51,700 shares and Taseko Mines Warrants A was steady at .12 on 45,000. International Brenmac Development dropped .12 to $1.67 on 37,500 and Golex Resources declined .04 to $1.03 on 34,700. Blackdome Explorations Warrants was down .02 to .33 and United Westland Warrants declined .04 to .82.

River Mountain Resources was down .14 to .70 on 46,200 and Nugold Enterprises rose .01 to .61 on 36,000. Corvette Petroleum was down .03 to $1.37 and Spectrum Industrial Resources gained .,02 to .57.

New York

Oil issues set the pace as the stock market staged a modest advance today.

Among actively traded oil stocks, Gulf Oil was up ⅝ to $43⅜, Exxon rose 1 to $66⅝, Standard Oil of Indiana 1⅛ to $57, Texaco ¼ to $37, and Mobil ⅝ to $77⅜.

At a meeting in Algiers, oil ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries were reported still unable to agree on a single base price. One delegate said the ministers agreed on the need to cut production, but Saudi Arabia said it would not go along without such an accord on pricing.

Interest rates, meanwhile, have recently resumed their steep slide, putting yields on U.S. short-term government securities at their lowest levels in more than two years.

The decline is considered positive in many respects for the stock market, particularly since it has steadily reduced the appeal of interest-bearing investments that compete with stocks for investors' funds.

But analysts say it has also resulted in new pressure on the U.S. dollar in foreign exchange, and contributed to worries about just how severe the recession will be.

Among Canadian issues on the NYSE, Campbell Red Lake Mines fell 1¾ to $39¼, Dome Mines 1¾ to $77½, McIntyre Mines 1½ to $72, Inco ¼ to $22⅜ and Seagram Co. ¼ to $54¾.

Canadian Pacific rose ¼ to $36¼.

London

Industrials firmed and oils were mixed near the close of trading on the London stock market today.

Chevron suit against Home dismisssed

CALGARY (CP) — A Court of Queen's Bench judge has dismissed a suit filed by Chevron Standard Ltd. against Home Oil Co. Ltd. for allegedly using trade secrets concerning the lucrative West Pembina oil field in Alberta.

Chevron filed the suit after one of its senior officials joined Home. Both companies have substantial interests in West Pembina, Alberta's most important oil discovery in more than a decade.

In a judgment released this week, Mr. Justice W. K. Moore said Home conducted its business "in a fair manner in a competitive industry and did so without seeking and without the benefit of information which might have been confidential to Chevron Standard Ltd."

Bonds

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were higher in active trading on the Canadian bond market Monday, continuing last Friday's rally.

The short end of the market was up 20 cents. Mid-, long-term and provincial issues gained one-half of a point. Corporate issues rose five-eighths.

Day-to-day money was available at 18 per cent.

The market was boosted psychologically with the realease of favourable ecomonic news in the United States on Friday, an analyst at Merrill Lynch, Royal Securities Ltd said. These positive fundamentals have brought some buyers off the sidelines and into the market place.

Dealers said institutional activity is increasing vigorously since Friday morning last week.

St. Louis bank, a small bank in the United States, cut its prime lending rate to 12 per cent from the 13 per cent charged by most banks, and there were predictions that interest rates in general will continue to fall.

Output decline worst in years

TORONTO (CP) — During 1980, the Canadian economy will suffer its first decline in real output in 26 years, says a report by Wood Gundy Ltd. of Toronto.

In its June forecast, the firm said the recession will be mild, but worse than the recession of 1974-76.

Real output is expected to decline about 0.5 per cent, compared with a decline of four per cent in the United States. Canada's recovery from the recession is expected to begin in the last quarter of 1980, but the American recovery is not expected to begin until the first quarter of 1981.

Wood Gundy said governments will probably do little to stem the recession.

"Until there is a convincing demonstration that productivity is recovering from its stagnation, policy makers will properly consider monetary ease a recipe for renewed inflation rather than expanded output and employment."

In another report, Wood Gundy predicted the federal government's borrowing requirements will rise to a record $13.94 billion in 1981.

The estimate for 1980 is $11.23 billion and the 1982 estimate is $12.5 billion.

The estimates assume there will be no major tax increases or cuts this year or next.

They also assume an oil pricing agreement will be reached with Alberta during the next few months that will allow Ottawa to eliminate its subsidy on imported oil, which now amounts to $3 billion a year.

"However, the downturn in the economy just getting started is likely to erode tax revenues, despite the corporate surcharge introduced by the Liberal government earlier this year."

'Ridiculous' customs rule puts Canada behind times

TORONTO (CP) — Next January, when every major industrialized country in the world adopts a new and simplified customs valuation system, Canada will retain a ridiculous system, says the president of the Canadian Importers Association.

Keith Dixon said the current system is "stupid, silly, archaic and unfair."

Currently, Canadian duty is assigned not on the transaction price for an imported good, but on the fair market value of that good in the originating country.

Dixon told a conference on trade here that this system has resulted in excessive tariffs and duties, since the value for duty under the fair market system is often higher than the transaction price.

In addition, the official assessment of fair market value is often inconsistent, and the assessment process itself is difficult, he said.

Canada intends to abandon the fair market system, but not until 1985. Most countries will make the change next year.

Chrysler boosting prices

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. is raising suggested retail prices of some of its imported cars an average $109, the company has announced.

The increase, effective immediately, applies to the Dodge Colt hatchback, Plymouth Champ, Plymouth Arrow car and pickup truck and the Dodge D-50 truck. For a vehicle with an average load of options, the increase will amount to 1.9 per cent, the company said.

Chrysler said the increases were the result of manufacturing and energy cost increases incurred by the Japanese manufacturer, Mitsubishi Motors Corp., and were within the price guidelines of the Carter administration.

No changes were made in standard equipment, the prices of options or transportation. The new price does not apply to vehicles already in dealer inventory.

Paopao is ready to walk out into real world

VANCOUVER — Joe Paopao's two-year apprenticeship under Jerry Tagge is over and B.C. Lions are waiting to find out how well he learned his lessons in Canadian Football League quarterbacking.

The 24-year-old pivot is the man behind the eight ball this season as he has been tabbed by head coach Vic Rapp to replace the vast experience of Tagge who failed his medical following off-season knee surgery.

"The things that he (Tagge) did teach me, I treasure them," says Paopao. "I hope to use them to advantage as far as game knowledge and playing time is concerned.

"I think I'm ready to walk out and into the real world now. I'm working on the things I need to work on, as opposed to two years ago when I had a lot to learn. Jerry was a great help and I'll miss him."

The Lions were winners under Tagge in the Western Conference. Tagge was brought in by Rapp in 1977 and in three years gave the Lions a 26-19-2 record, although he missed two-thirds of the 1979 season when injured.

That's when Paopao entered the picture full time and he managed to compete 56 per cent of his passes last season, including a CFL record 18 straight in a game last August here against Toronto Argonauts.

"Joe's had a real fine camp and we've got a lot of faith in Joe," Rapp says about his No. 1 quarterback. "He's going to be a fine player in this league because he's got the ability to read defences better."

Paopao had trouble with defences late last season when the Lions lost their final four league games to finish third in the WFC with a 9-6-1 record. Then came a humilating 37-2 loss in Calgary to the Stampeders in the conference semi-final.

Rapp is the only coach in the 26-year history of the Lions with a winning record. His credentials are marred, however, by two playoff losses, including a 38-1 setback to Edmonton Eskimos in the 1977 WFC final.

Rapp isn't planning many changes this season, although he wants better play at offensive tackle and more consistency from the wide receivers.

The biggest change will see dangerous Leon Bright moved from wide receiver to defensive corner, a move which will allow either Tyron Gray or Ricky Ellis to play on offence.

"I think Leon's a good athlete and he can perform for us on defence," Rapp says. "He's made a lot of progress up to date and has looked good in camp scrimmages.

"He's an athlete we think can play in a lot of different places. If he can play on defence, it will make us a better team."

Paopao says Gray and Ellis are "top-notch receivers" and the move of Bright to defence "shouldn't be a big loss for us there."

Bright gets his first test tonight in the team's opening game of the exhibition schedule against Ottawa Rough Riders, who have one of the more dangerous wide receivers in the CFL in Martin Cox.

* * *

"The major problems for me have been backing up and learning the zone," says Bright. "I like offence the best, though, because that's what I've been playing all my life.

"I had played defence a couple of plays before, when guys got hurt during a game, but that's about all. I've got a lot to learn, but I think I can do it.

"I don't expect to go back to offence because the guys say I've made the change pretty good."

Paopao will still have the speed of backs Larry Key and John Henry White on offence, plus the exciting potential of tight end Harry Holt to deal with. Holt is dangerous as a runner and has shown exceptional speed for a man who weighs 225 pounds.

Offensive tackle has provided the biggest fight of the camp, with holdover Jim Lohmann and experienced Tom Humphrey (from Calgary) challenged by rookie imports Donnie Hickman and Darius Helton.

The Lions face other problems on defence. Tackle Frank Landy and linebackers Sam Britts and John Beaton are returning from serious knee injuries, while end Louie Richardson has been switched to defensive tackle.

"I think we have upgraded our pass rush," Rapp adds. "We have seven veterans in the defensive line and, by the various nature of the competition, we've upgraded.

"We've also got a couple of young guys in camp who have shown quite a bit, including a kid by the name of Mike Mitchell. He has come along and been a pleasant surprise because we really didn't expect much from him. He's a contender right now, along with Mike Blanton at tackle."

Richardson's move to tackle has put quick Nick Hebeler to end, where his speed has caused offensive linemen trouble in camp.

A positive addition to the defence has been veteran safety Tony Proudfoot, obtained from Montreal in a trade which moved Doug Carlson to the Alouettes.

"There's a lot more intensity in this camp than in Montreal," says Proudfoot, "and after the first two weeks I seem to have made the necessary adjustments.

"I have a better over-all understanding of how I fit into the scheme of things. There's been a lot more running and conditioning here than I was used to in the east."

Key, who gained more than 1,000 yards rushing in his first two CFL seasons, has set his — and the team's — objectives for the year.

"Our goal now is the ultimate — we're looking at the Grey Cup. I think if we start looking in that direction right now, we'll have our goals set right.

"Joe (Paopao) has been looking real good. He has stepped in and taken charge; he knows what he has to do this season."

More Bid records

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Spectacular Bid, now in his final season of competition, has added two more records plus a winning compliment from jockey Bill Shoemaker. "I'd have to say that he's probably the best horse I've ever ridden," said the rider who has 7,851 victories to his credit including 157 in races worth $100,000 or more.

Shoemaker rode Spectacular Bid to victory Sunday in the $319,450 Californian at Hollywood Park. The time of 1:45 4-5 bettered the track record for 1⅛ miles and the winning purse of $184,450 increased the colts career earnings to $2,394,268, edging him past the $2,393,818 by now-retired Affirmed.

Trainer Bud Delp hopes to run Spectacular Bid in the $400,000 Hollywood Gold Cup on June 22, but that depends a lot on how much weight his charge is assigned. Then it will be back East for three races before retirement to stud with the horse, who has won 23 of 27 outings and is already syndicated for a record $22 million.

Rocks close in on berth

With eyes on the world championship, Victoria Shamrocks crept to within two points of first place in the Western Lacrosse Association by nipping leading Coquitlam Adanacs 10-9 in Coquitlam Monday night.

The league leader on June 21 will represent the league in the Nations '80 tournament, the first world box lacrosse championship.

It was the eighth win in 11 games for Rocks. The Adanacs, who play the Rocks at 8 Wednesday night in Memorial Arena, have nine wins but have played one more game than Victoria.

Coquitlam held a 7-6 edge going into the last period but Kevin Alexander scored twice and Rick Baker got what proved to be the winning goal.

Jim Lynch was the leading scorer for Victoria, though, with four goals. Paul Michael got two goals and Dave Thompson was the other scorer.

Coquitlam got two goals each from Gord Quilty and Mark Valastin. Kevin Parsons, Ray Mattinson, Rico Bellusci, Mike Reelie and Tim Kelly scored the other goals.

Mike Duch, who played the first period and started the second, and Larry Smeltzer combined to make 47 saves in the Victoria goal and Greg Thomas made 25 stops for Coquitlam.

Shamrocks got some good news and some bad news Monday. First the good news — they signed Danny Green and he is expected to play for them Wednesday night. Green didn't sign with the club at the start of this season because of uncertainty over the employment situation.

And the bad news for the club is that Jim Boyd has suffered a knee injury and will be out for at least a week.

Nanaimo Timbermen moved to within two points of third-place New Westminster by defeating the Salmonbellie 16-13 in Nanaimo.

Brian Evans scored four goals and Ron McNeil had three for the Timbermen, who scored their second win in three days. Doug Angrove and Ron Sage got two goals each for Nanaimo and the other goals were scored by Jeff Frketich, Wayne Reeve, Charn Dhillon, Ken King and Ron Brown.

Les Cimminelli was the top Salmonbellies' scorer with four goals.

First-team spot for Bruin rookie

RAY BOURQUE

MONTREAL (CP) — Defenceman Ray Bourque of Boston Bruins has become the first player other than a goaltender to be voted to the National Hockey League first all-star team in the same season in which he won the Calder Memorial Trophy as rookie-of-the-year.

Bourque joined Larry Robinson of Montreal Canadiens, the James Norris Memorial Trophy winner as the league's best defenceman, on the 1979-80 first all-star team announced today in conjunction with the NHL annual meetings.

Other first-team members are goaltender Tony Esposito of Chicago Black Hawks, centre Marcel Dionne of Los Angeles Kings, right winger Guy Lafleur of Montreal and left winger Charlie Simmer of Los Angeles.

Before Bourque, the only rookies-of-the-year to be elected to the first all-star team were goaltenders — Frank Brimsek of Boston in 1938-39, Terry Sawchuk of Detroit Red Wings in 1950-51, Roger Crozier of Detroit in 1964-65 and Chicago's Esposito in 1969-70.

Voting was conducted among three members of the Professional Hockey Writers' Association in each of the league's 21 cities. Ballots were cast on a 5-3-1 points basis for three choices. No choice was unanimous.

Esposito garnered 221 points compared with 167 for Don Edwards of Buffalo Sabres, the second-team selection. Robinson had 280 points and Bourque 183 on defence. Second-team blue line picks were Borje Salming of Toronto Maple Leafs with 179 points and Jim Schoenfeld of Buffalo with 134.

Dionne won the first-team centre berth with 250 points against 238 for Wayne Gretzky of Edmonton Oilers, the second-team choice who last week was announced as the winner of the Hart Memorial Trophy as the NHL's most-valuable player and the Lady Byng Memorial Trophy as the player best combining sportsmanship and ability.

Lafleur earned 294 points at right wing, coming closest to the 315 points that would constitute a unanimous choice. Danny Gare of Buffalo was second with 130 points. On left wing, Simmer got 280 points compared with 86 for Steve Shutt of Montreal.

Lafleur is the second player in the 50-year history of all-star teams to be named to six consecutive first-team right wing berths. The first was Montreal great Maurice (Rocket) Richard, elected from 1944-45 through 1949-50.

The most consecutive first-team selections is eight, by defenceman Bobby Orr with Boston from 1967-68 through 1974-75. Defenceman Doug Harvey of Montreal and left winger Bobby Hull of Chicago each was named to seven first teams in a row.

Lafleur and Robinson are the only repeat selections from the 1978-79 first team. Dionne and Salming were second-team selections last year.

Four players besides Bourque are making their first appearance on an all-star team: Simmer, Schoenfeld, Gare and Gretzky. Gretzky was 19 on Jan. 26 and is the second-youngest player ever named to an all-star team. Orr was two months younger when named to the second team for 1966-67.

More curbs on brawling

MONTREAL (CP) — National Hockey League general managers haggled over procedural matters Monday and deferred discussion of divisional realignment to today, leaving the rules committee to produce developments at the first full day of the annual meetings.

Realignment for the 1980-81 season would require a unanimous vote of the 21 teams and, with the board of governors not meeting until June 23-24 in Los Angeles, the general managers are not expected to come to any radical agreements.

The rules committee, meanwhile, voted several changes that referee-in-chief Scotty Morrison said show the NHL has adopted its toughest stand ever against brawling.

"I don't see that we can get any tougher," Morrison said after the committee meeting of more than five hours.

"We'd be happy if we eliminated it completely," Morrison said of brawling. "We'd be happy if there wasn't a bench-clearing brawl all season."

All rule changes technically must be ratified by the board of governors — a nicety that had been considered trivial until league president John Ziegler scrambled to make the point Monday night — but among the changes voted by the committee was that when a fight erupts, all players must go to their benches or a distinct zone of non-combatants. Failure to do so will result in a minor penalty.

Any player who drops a glove or both gloves after a fight has started will be assessed a 10-minute misconduct.

"We hope this will reduce the number of second and third fights that have been a concern to us," said Morrison.

In addition, any player who leaves the bench "during or to start an altercation" will receive a double minor, game misconduct and an automatic three-game suspension. The rule has called for a one-game susspension.

The second time in one season that the same player leaves the bench to start or join a fight, he will receive a six-game suspension, with the terms increasing by three games on each occasion. Suspensions now will carry over from the regular season into playoffs instead of becoming void at the end of the regular schedule.

While there were other minor rule changes, the substantial matter of overtime after regular-season ties was referred to the governors after the rules committee split "about half and half," Morrison said.

The committee did decide that, if such overtime were adopted, it would be a 10-minute sudden death period rather than a five-minute period.

Billy Martin insists ump merits same punishment

What's good for Bill Madlock should be good for umpire Dale Ford, says manager Billy Martin of Oakland A's.

Lee MacPhail, the American League president, will have to decide whether, as Martin charges, Ford pushed the manager during an argument early in the baseball game Sunday against Boston Red Sox.

"If Madlock can be suspended and fined, so should an umpire," said Martin, citing the case of Pittsburgh Pirates' third baseman now under suspension for sticking his glove in an umpire's face. "There should be no double standard."

Ford denied pushing Martin during their argument, which followed Martin's ejection from the game, and the umpire also denied Martin's charge that he challenged the manager to fight after the game.

"I'd say he was the one doing the challenging," said Ford, who is in his fifth season as a major league umpire.

He said he "might have brushed" Martin as they faced off near home plate but that the allegation he pushed the manager was "an out-and-out lie."

Martin said television tapes will prove him correct, and he said a radio reporter's tape of the post-game confrontation also will support his story. Ken Kaiser, a former professional wrestler in the 250-pound range, was the third base umpire Sunday and he stepped between Martin and Ford in the second inning and also after the game.

Ford noted that this was his first run-in with Martin, and he said, "After this one, I don't believe it'll be my last."

Both Ford and Martin talked by telephone Monday with MacPhail to give their versions of the action which started after Ford ruled in the second inning that Oakland's Tony Armas struck out on a swing he tried to check.

"I ruled it was a half swing, and that's what it was," said Ford.

Martin said he merely yelled from the dugout asking Ford to check on the call with another umpire and that Ford ejected him before he left the dugout. Under baseball rules, a manager is automatically ejected if he comes out of the dugout to protest a strike call.

Meanwhile, Martin's A's dropped a 3-2 decision Monday to Baltimore Orioles.

In other AL action, Reggie Jackson, hampered this season by an injured leg, came on to hit a two-run double and a home run to pace New York Yankees to an 8-7 victory over California Angels and Seattle Mariners dropped Boston Red Sox, 8-7.

In the National League, St. Louis Cardinals chalked up an 8-5 victory over Atlanta Braves, San Francisco Giants took 7½ hours (including a five-hour rain delay) to drop Philadelphia 3-1, Cincinnati Reds and San Diego Padres played to a 6-6 tie with the game called after 10½ innings following 3½ hours of rain delays and Houston Astros beat Chicago Cubs, 6-2.

Door remains open

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — The door was still open today for athletes from the United States and other boycotting countries to get into the Olympic Games as individuals.

The executive board of the International Olympic Committee (IOC), meeting in Lausanne less than six weeks before the opening ceremony in Moscow, awaited a report from Arpad Csnadi, its Hungarian member and technical adviser.

The board adjourned earlier than expected Monday night to give Csnadi a chance to contact the international sports federations to see if they would agree to a bending of Olympic rules.

Lord Killanin, IOC president, gave Csnadi the job of trying to find a way past a situation that has blocked individual athletes from the Olympic Games for the last 84 years.

When the U.S. Olympic Committee responded to President Jimmy Carter's call and decided to boycott the games in Moscow, many American athletes who wanted to compete despite the Soviet military action in Afghanistan found their entry barred.

Bring back fellowship and fun to the matches

The sound of discontent has popped up (again) among golfers interested in playing for their club teams in the Inter-Club League, and I'm reluctant to mention it because it may fester a wound that need not be.

The grumbling, I am told, is by golfers who feel they should be playing and someone else should not.

It is happening because, in the opinion of some of the district's better golfers, a handful are becoming far too serious about the competition for the Willie Park Driver.

"It's supposed to be a fun thing," suggested one player during the City Amateur at the weekend. "At best, serious fun ... but not ridiculously serious."

A good point from the other side of the coin. Remember that for the first dozen or so years, there were very few arguments or complaints. The serious fun belonged to the club captains, who made up the weekly pairings in secrecy and in the hope they would gain the upper hand over the opposition on Wednesday evening.

During the summer, anyone who deserved to play generally got a chance to play — and it didn't matter if the club based its selection on a qualifying trial or left the matter up to a committee or the club captain. The grumbling showed up only in recent years.

Six club captains are involved. Not one would deliberately ignore a chance to improve his club's team. For one thing, they have to face each other, and other members of the District Committee, at various meetings. They find nothing more embarassing than explaining their control of the Bigelow Putter, the booby prize.

If the concept of fun and fellowship returns, and if pride remains, then the bickering and discontent will quickly disappear.

DOROTHY DeGIROLAMO ... one over par

Champ collects medal

Women's par at Cedar Hill has jumped to 68 because of the recent change of par on the 17th hole.

The 426-yard hole's regulation figure now is a five instead of four.

"That makes it a good birdie hole now," said Dorothy DeGirolamo, even after the 17th presented the defending champion with her only troubles Monday.

The other 17 holes offered no problems as Mrs. DeGirlolamo comfortably collected medal honors in the qualifying round of the 1980 Victoria District women's golf championship with a one-over-par 69.

It marks the fifth time the Gorge Vale redhead has captured the medal.

She took a one-over-par six on the 17th to wreck her chances of a par or sub-par round.

"It was the only bad hole I played," she said. "I was very pleased with my game."

The round was not a record. Former champion Dale Shaw of Glen Meadows, who went into professional ranks, scored a 65 to set the Cedar Hill record for women.

DeGirolamo, who had nines of 34 and 35 to finish two strokes ahead of last year's medalist, Joanne Smith of Royal Colwood, was scheduled to play Myra MacLean of Royal Colwood in the first round of championship match play today.

The top sixteen players advanced to the championship of the five-day event.

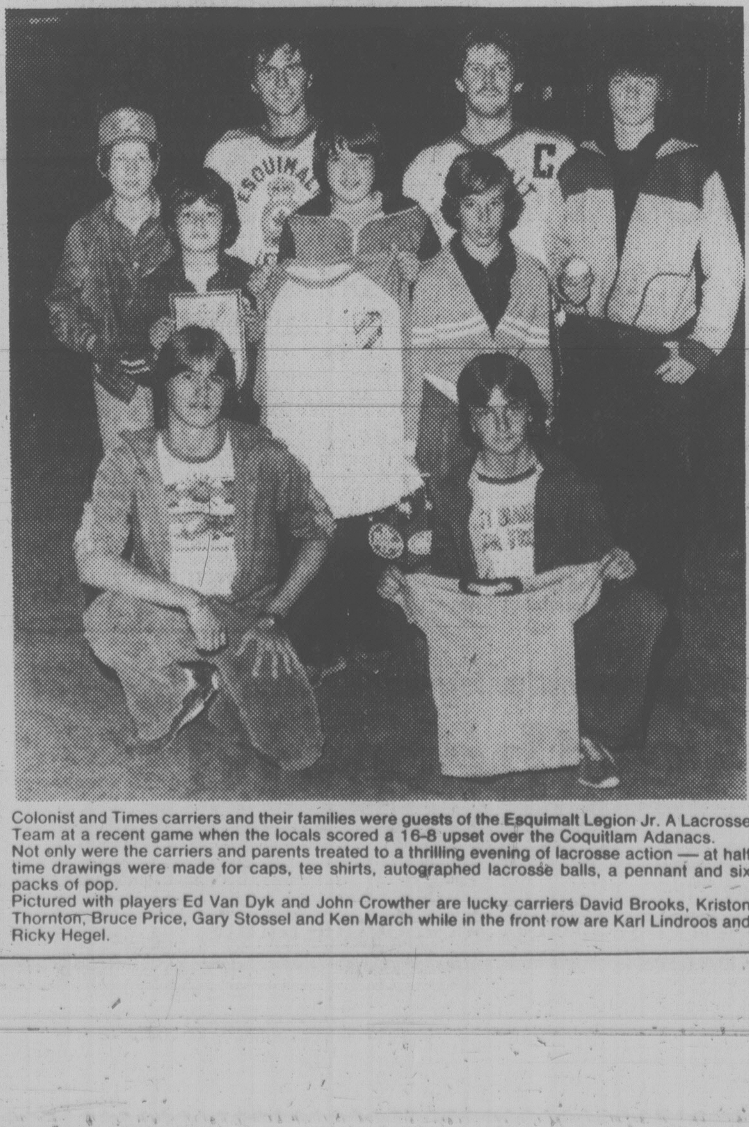
Carriers enjoy exciting Lacrosse action



Colonist and Times carriers and their families were guests of the Esquimalt Legion Jr. A Lacrosse Team at a recent game when the locals scored a 16-8 upset over the Coquitlam Adanacs.
Not only were the carriers and parents treated to a thrilling evening of lacrosse action — at half time drawings were made for caps, tee shirts, autographed lacrosse balls, a pennant and six packs of pop.

Blues sign four

Victoria Blues, getting ready for their start in the 1980 Northwest Baseball League season, have added four more players to the roster. Team officials announced Monday the signing of two pitchers, a catcher and an outfielder.

The newest Blues are Jack Uhey, a 22-year-old righthander who pitched in Chicago Cubs' minor organization, Mark Liber, also 22, a lefthanded pitcher from Pepperdine University in California who was the eighth round draft pick of Toronto Blue Jays in 1979, Tom Lichfield, a 21-year-old catcher from Arizona University and outfielder Leo Lasala, 21, of Arizona State University.

Blues, who have been doing their pre-season training at Pepperdine University, broke camp in California Monday and are scheduled to arrive in Victoria Wednesday.

SEABORN

'Padre Bob' will soon be back

By PAT DUFOUR

"Padre Bob" will be back with his regimental family Thursday evening.

That's when the Canadian Scottish Regimental Association hosts a reception for Archbishop Bob Seaborn from St. John's, Nfld.

Open to all ex-members of the Canadian Scottish Regiment (Princess Mary's), the gathering in the sergeants' mess of Bay Street Armoury will appeal particularly to those who knew Seaborn better as "Burying Bob" or "Head of the Underground Movement."

That was in the Second World War when Seaborn was with the regiment all the way from Juno Beach at Graye-Sur-Mer on D-Day for 11 months as it fought through France, Holland and into Germany.

Seaborn, who is here to attend a Canadian Forces Chaplain Branch (P) conference and retreat at Royal Roads, confesses he wasn't exactly welcomed with open arms when he joined the regiment in the spring of 1943. The regiment, made up of Vancouver Islanders, had some serious misgivings about a padre from Eastern Canada — Toronto, to be exact.

They didn't mind having an easterner for a doctor — the late Dr. Gordon Young of Montreal — but their padre? That was something else.

"They weren't used to an easterner being a part of the Canadian Scottish . . . but I became part of the regimental family very quickly," he recalls.

What was it like to land on D-Day, knowing this was the real thing and not another training session?

"We arrived at 8:15 a.m., 15 minutes late, that's not bad," he says. "It was a bit formidable. There were block houses on either side, lots of machine-gun fire and casualties. I felt better when I saw the soldiers coming out of the block houses with their hands in the air."

Seaborn stayed on the beach two or three days, caring for the sick and the dying.

"The first night I slept in a ditch. I was too tired to dig a trench. I wrapped myself in my gas cape and went to sleep."

The first objective of the Canadian Scottish, accompanied by the Winnipeg and Regina Rifles, was to cut off the highway between Bayeau and Caen. They managed to do that in a couple of days. Seaborn hitched a ride back to his regiment.

The next time Seaborn began earning his grim nicknames — "You'd have to joke about it, otherwise you'd weep" — was at Putot-en-Besin where the regiment held its position for a week under heavy counter-attacks.

The bodies of his comrades were strewn over the area. He managed to find a horse and two-wheeled cart. Along with a mess sergeant he gathered up the bodies and buried them.

"I've written a lot of next-of-kin letters in my time."

Along with sadness there was also humor and Seaborn tells of another incident that earned him a different set of nicknames.

The regiment was crossing the river Seine in assault boats being tried out for the first time. The padre's jeep was loaded on one and the craft set out with the two engineers running the craft, the padre and his batman-driver.

"We were halfway across when my batman got out to stand in front of the vehicle. The front began to tip and the engineers revved up but it was too late. It went down, we were all in the water and I had lost my jeep."

Seaborn says most of his equipment floated to shore. The four men stripped and dried their things in the August sun.

"Then the men began saying 'the padre's gone inSeine and Baptist, he had a complete immersion.' "

These and other stories will undoubtedly do the rounds on Thursday when the "family" honors Padre Bob from the east.

School board to test team bargaining

The Greater Victoria school board is willing to try the committee approach to collective bargaining with its 1,200 teachers instead of confronting negotiators across the table and ending up in arbitration.

Trustees agreed Monday to give single-team bargaining a test in 1980 contract talks with the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association, provided teachers feel the same way.

For 17 of the last 20 years teacher contract settlements in District 61 have been arbitrated after collective bargaining collapsed, and trustees are anxious to find a more effective way to negotiate.

The idea, according to single-team proponents, is to seat representatives of both sides in an informal committee-like setting for resolution of mutual concerns in place of adversarial hard-line bargaining.

Even the seating arrangement is different, with union and management representatives alternated. There are no single spokesmen, with the result that discussion is free.

Three trustees, including freshmen Mike Hutchison and Terry Hackett, opposed the idea, with Hutchison pointing out that according to supporting material presented Monday, single-team bargaining has been effective only in settling non-monetary items.

Trustee John Young, chairman of personnel committee, said team bargaining was conceived "to reduce the level of conflict of the adversarial system." At present neither side makes realistic proposals and the atmosphere is not conducive to agreement.

Trustee Peter Yorke said he would not support the team idea, and stood by his suggestion that teacher bargaining be delegated wholly to the board's secretary-treasurer, Carl Warner. Team bargaining implied total faith in its members by trustees, he said.

"I would not have complete faith in some members of the team that would be picked."

Right to strike firmly opposed

District 61 school trustees are firm about keeping their right to local bargaining but reject any suggestion that teachers should have the right to strike or that trustees be entitled to lock them out.

School board members responded in a straw poll Monday to a B.C. School Trustees' Association task force on bargaining policy.

Local bargaining is preferable to regional or provincial bargaining, the board said.

But on the questions of right to strike and lock out teachers, and teachers' right to negotiate working conditions, trustees voted no.

On the fourth and last question, regarding BCSTA policy that supervisory teachers be excluded from collective bargaining units, Victoria trustees had no opinion.

Personnel committee recommended the board endorse a joint proposal from its liaison with Greater Victoria Teachers' Association.

It was recommended first-year teachers should not be assigned to teach kindergarten or Grade 1, take counselling, or learning assistance responsibilities, teach children with severe learning or behavioral problems, and if possible should not be assigned split classes or a large number of grades and subjects.

The motion died on the table when it failed to get a seconder.

Tory MPs urge full Kemano probe

OTTAWA (CP) — A massive power project in British Columbia should be judged by the environmental standards of 1980 rather than by those of 1950 when the project was originally given the go-ahead, Conservative MPs from the province said Monday.

They urged the federal government to hold a public inquiry into the second phase of the Aluminum Co. of Canada's Kemano development because fisheries and Indian lands — both federal responsibilities — will be affected.

Lorne McCuish from Prince George-Buckley Valley and Lorne Greenaway of Cariboo-Chilcotin said the project would cut water supplies in the B.C. Interior and damage salmon spawning grounds in several rivers.

The $800-million project is designed to more than double the power production of Alcan's existing Kemano facility which fuels the company's aluminum smelter at Kitimat in Northeastern B.C.

Designed eventually to power three new smelters planned by Alcan, the project involves expanded dams and tunnels that would cut the flow of the Nechako River and alter the flow of other rivers to deliver more water to Kemano generators.

Alcan plans to go ahead under a provincial water rights agreement issued in 1950. But local opposition is strong and the provincial government has mentioned the possibilitymof a public inquiry.

George Henderson, Liberal MP for Egmont P.E.I. and parliamentary secretary to Fisheries Minister Romeo Leblanc, said Monday the minister has said he "would favor a public inquiry" as well.

Grass gets just what it doesn't need

One thing Victoria boulevards don't need these days is heavy watering.

On Monday night it turned out the turned-on sprinkler system was the work of pranksters, not city parks or works crews.

Sprinklers from the James Bay Community School down Oswego and along Dallas Road were turned on full blast, with a dozen sprinkler heads shooting streams more than four metres up.

Ottawa rush to offer coal alternatives

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government hopes to make proposals on financing rail lines to carry coal from northeastern B.C. to port before coal companies make a sales pitch in Japan next Sunday, Economic Development Minister Bud Olson said Monday.

He said Ottawa will try to come up with several alternatives "enough hours before that so they can put together a firm, hard proposal."

"We are trying to meet that," he said of the June 15 deadline set by the Japanese.

But federal proposals will hinge on B.C.'s willingness to share possible cost overruns in railway building in the rugged corner of the province, Olson added in an interview.

Don Phillips, B.C. economic development minister, earlier gave Ottawa until today to produce financing arrangements. But Olson said he was never advised of that deadline, not even in weekend conversations with his B.C. counterpart.

(Phillips was not av)ailable today for comment).

Urgency became a factor when the Japanese gave B.C. companies until June 15 — a deadline which was extended from the end of May — to offer a price for the annual sale of 5.3 million tonnes of metallurgical coal.

Information on the cost of rail lines is necessary so the coal companies can add transportation costs into their calculations of a price to offer the Japanese. Australia, a traditional Japanese supplier, is also interested in a deal.

To export the northeastern B.C. coal, a rail line must be built and others must be improved to move it to Prince Rupert where a coal-loading facility must be built.

The main stumbling block is construction of the 115-kilometre spur line into the coalfields. A 16-kilometre tunnel on that stretch will be one of the major expenses of the railway portion of the project, Olson said.

B.C. has asked Canadian National Railways, rather than the provincially-owned B.C. Rail, to build the line. B.C. Rail has run into massive cost overruns in other projects to extend its rails.

Olson said provincial and federal estimates of the cost of getting coal to port still are far apart.

"We have got to get these figures closer together or somebody has to take an unspecified risk in taking responsibility for cost overruns."

OPEC talks turn into shouts

Times News Services

ALGIERS — Oil ministers from the 13 OPEC countries said today they have agreed on the need to reduce oil production, but the once-monolithic organization appeared to be breaking down into increasingly bitter squabbles.

Iran and Iraq got into a shouting match at the meeting Monday night, Qatar stalked off and Saudi Arabia stayed away.

The world oil cartel appears so badly split it won't be able to compromise on a uniform price.

Venezuelan Oil Minister Humberto Calderon Berti confirmed the ministers were "still arguing" over the price issue, and said he thought achieving unified prices here would be "impossible."

Kuwait Oil Minister Ali Khalifah al-Sabah also said there was "not yet" the basis for an accord.

But conference sources said even without a compromise that prices will stay about the same for the rest of 1980.

The sources said that Iranian Oil Minister Ali Akhbar Moinfar accused Iraq and Saudi Arabia of "serving American imperialism by raising production rates."

They said Iraqi Oil Minister Tayeh Abdel-Karim shouted back that Iraq was the first power in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to nationalize Western-owned oil operations.

The sources said Saudi Arabia's minister did not even attend and Qatar's walked out of the hall in the middle of the session. However, all 13 ministers are to meet today to take up the pricing issue in detail.

Iraq has proposed that all OPEC nations charge $32 U.S. (about $37 Canadian) a barrel for their oil. Under the proposal, OPEC hawks — including Iran — would have to drop prices by $3 a barrel, middle-of-the-roaders would raise theirs $2 and Saudi Arabia, which produces one-third of all OPEC oil, would increase prices $4.

But Moinfar said "there was no way" Iran will decrease prices, that he is sure there will be no agreement and that along with Algeria, Libya and Nigeria, Iran will continue to sell oil for as much as it can get for it.

Iraq and Iran are at ideological odds and recently have engaged in sporadic fighting along their shared border. Iran accuses Iraq of being a stooge of the United States.

For different reasons than Iran, Saudi Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani is resisting the Iraqi plan.

Yamani told reporters he was "very pessimistic" the pricing-structuring plan would succeed. The Saudis oppose the plan in hopes that a slackening demand on world oil markets will force other OPEC members to charge less for their oil later this year, conference sources said.

Yamani recently predicted oil prices will collapse by fall because of reduced demand caused in part by the U.S. recession.

Members of the organization have not been able to agree on a uniform pricing policy since February, 1979. Several previous efforts to restore uniformity have failed, most recently at the organization's meeting last December in Caracas, Venezuela.

TOWN TALK

A bolt snapped and down splashed the end of the ferry ramp at Long Harbour on Salt Spring Island Saturday. Unfortunately, it was just before the Queen of Sidney arrived at 10 p.m. on her last run of the day from Tsawwassen.

As ramp attendants struggled to reposition the ramp manually so the ferry could berth, Capt. Ian McLean followed custom and offered the 77 passengers aboard a little something during what turned out to be an hour-long wait.

Now the announcement by the captain in such circumstances usually specifies tea or coffee. In this case Capt. McLean simply offered "refreshments."

Seconds later passengers were helping themselves to sandwiches, pie, cake and anything else not nailed down in the cafeteria display cases. Rather than risk a riot, the crew was advised to let it ride.

One of the most swinging parties in town took place on the quarter deck of the Japanese training ship Katori Monday night.

Young officers, immaculately dressed in white uniforms, introduced guests that included Rear-Admiral Michael Martin, commander maritime forces Pacific, Esquimalt Mayor Ken Hill and Victoria alderman Bill McElroy to raw fish delicacies and other Japanese gourmet items.

The Katori and the destroyer Okigumo are here to mark the 100th anniversary of the first Japanese ship to visit Victoria and if you closed your eyes you could believe you were back in the days of the old British empire.

Guests guzzled and nibbled as the ship's band played Land of Hope and Glory and when it was time to go, the Japanese did it well.

The young officers lined up to bid their guests farewell and the band played — you guessed it — Auld Lang Syne.

If and when the Maritime Museum's plans for a new waterfront location come to pass, there will be a fascinating exhibit as centrepiece — a working boatyard.

Director Capt. Keith Cameron says the museum recently acquired Henry Vollmers' boatyard in Nanaimo, a family-owned establishment which sent more than 140 wooden fishboats and other pleasure yachts down the ways at the mouth of the Millstone River.

The museum is in the middle of moving tools and machinery from Nanaimo to Victoria. Wooden casting forms, hand tools, hull models, C-clamps of various sizes — all of them made by hand in Vollmers' shop — are already at Bastion Square. Next to come will be the larger belt-driven machinery.

The firm was started in the early 1890s by Vollmers' father at Spotlight Cove at the north end of Galiano Island. He moved it to Nanaimo in 1908.

But in view of events, the bank decided to send its winners from across the country to some of the original Olympic Games sites instead.

For 17 days three boys and a girl will be guests of the bank in Athens, Corinth, Piraeus, Santoris, Crete, Mycenae, Ephesus and the temple of Artemis; Delos, Mykonos and Rhodes, plus a sidestep into Istanbul.

Marty ought to have enough what-I-did-last-summer material to last through elementary school.

Sealand of the Pacific's sea lion Bonnie, except for misfortune, would have pulled off an amazing record on the weekend.

For the third year in succession the eight-year-old sea lion gave birth on June 7, but this time her 23-pound male pup was mysteriously stillborn. An autopsy will determine why.

To stop her grieving Bonnie was immediately reunited with her mate, Clyde, and Bonnie is now back in the show where her two earlier June 7 pups, Popeye and Sinbad, had been filling in during her maternity leave.

Sealand trainer Cees Schrage found the perfectly-formed pup lying dead by his mother in the isolation pen on Saturday night. He expects Bonnie and Clyde to begin courting again soon. Gestation period is 11 months.

The banana-shaped dream is coming unpeeled

Saanich's core turning to slum

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Once upon a time Saanich municipal planners labored and brought forth a vision of a vibrant, people-filled downtown area along the narrow, banana-shaped strip of land between Vernon and Seymour.

A 1978 civic core study was considered the planning department's crowning achievement.

"I believe this plan provides the guidelines that can make a Saanich dream come true," chief planner Gil Laurenson said then.

Two years later the area destined to become the cultural, institutional and social centre of the district is turning into a slum, pitted with barely-started construction sites and unkempt, boarded-up houses.

Developers, for a number of reasons, are not interested in Saanich's civic core.

The reasons include three lanes of fast-moving traffic surrounding the core area, high development costs and a current surplus of office space.

The politicians who embraced the vision are getting worried.

"Nobody is even talking about making things happen. There's absolutely zilch going on," Mayor Mel Couvelier said.

Mayor calls for review

The mayor has called for a review of the civic core concept.

"If no development is happening and the area is going downhill rapidly then it must be uneconomic," he said.

Earlier this week Couvelier asked the Greater Victoria Real Estate Board to help planners rework their idealistic, people-oriented concept into a more practical land-use proposal.

However, Laurenson feels the dream is still very much alive — all it needs is time to become a reality.

"Long-term planning is the key if we want to see the dream fulfilled," he said last week.

The planner says he is a little afraid council may succumb to a short-term compromise that will harm the development of the core.

No amount of manoeuvring will change the fact the development market is not good right now, he said.

"I think we're not going to be able to pull any rabbits out of hats . . . that's the truth of it," Laurenson said.

"It looked as though everything was going to gel and then the bottom fell out of the market."

A current surplus of office space indicates development activity in the core may not take place for some time.

'Maybe it has to lie fallow'

"Maybe it has to lie fallow for a while until the market picks up."

Laurenson agrees with other planning experts who say locating the new police station and regional health office in the civic core would have been a good idea.

Council decided recently to put both buildings on Quadra.

Laurenson also suggested a provincial government office in the core could help spur development.

And he predicted the severe rental accommodation crisis will eventually force senior government to subsidize apartment construction in areas like the civic core.

A section of the core has already been zoned and serviced for apartment use.

Meanwhile, the few remaining homeowners trapped in the core are resigned to a long wait.

William Houston bought his home at 885 Verson 29 years ago. Rick Stevens purchased what he thought was a nice home at 881 Vernon in 1975.

Both are are faced with taxes that have doubled and a neighborhood that is falling apart.

They wear earplugs to sleep

"My wife and I have to wear earplugs to sleep at night and the dog is afraid to go for a walk," Stevens told the Times.

Both said they accepted attractive offers from Quebec-based Campeau Corporation when it announced multi-million dollar plans to expand Town and Country shopping centre into the core.

The announcement touched off a flurry of buying and selling inside the core until Campeau made a second announcement cancelling development plans because of high land prices.

"From our point of view it was like winning a sweepstakes and having them announce it was a mistake," Stevens said.

Campeau's withdrawal scuttled other development proposals, including a hotel-theatre complex at one end of the strip.

Most of the 49 properties inside the core are still zoned for single-family homes.

The properties are held by 14 owners — a mixed bag including developers, speculators, real estate companies and the provincial government.

The only construction taking place in the core was halted recently.

Builder Sarjeet S. Johal said work stopped on his office complex because he can't find tenants.

The real estate board's industrial, commercial and investment committee plans to meet as soon as possible with the property owners to discuss development problems and alternatives.

"At this point we're trying to get some suggestions. We haven't studied the project," said committee chairman, realtor Bill Fife.

Resthaven hotel bid rejected

A proposed Prime Enterprises Ltd. hotel-apartment-condominium complex on the old Resthaven Hospital site was turned down by Sidney town council Monday night.

Ald. Ross Martin summed up council's feelings when he labelled the proposal "overkill."

Councillors didn't care for a commercial project of such magnitude in what is basically a residential area.

Market foes fear pests

Opponents of a farm produce market proposed for Blenkinsop Road painted a picture Monday of rats and wasps feeding on waste from the operation and invading their homes.

Pests were one of several objections voiced by a handful of people who spoke against the rezoning application during a public hearing at Saanich municipal hall.

The application was to rezone property at Blenkinsop and McKenzie from rural to rural-farm market use.

The proposed aluminum-sided structure would be an eyesore and create traffic problems, residents charged.

Council voted to adjourn the hearing until July 7 and ask for a report from the traffic committee.

Municipal staff will discuss a development permit to set down landscaping guidelines with the owner of the property.

Mayor Mel Couvelier said he is serious about preserving the rural nature of the Blenkinsop Valley.

"And the best way to do that is by putting an agricultural use on the property," he told aldermen.

Ald. Sandy Noel, who approved the marketplace concept, said the owner has been paying taxes on that property for a number of years and should be able to use it.

"I don't know how far we can go turning down applications," he said.

In other business, Couvelier announced work has begun on the first Royal Oak industrial park project.

The ground-breaking ceremony for the $6 million Gray Beverage bottling plant was held Monday afternoon.

Council also approved a request by developers Broadmead Farms Ltd. to alter the Royal Oak community plan to include its entire 713-acre land holding.

Company vice-president Merv Mawson said a small part of Broadmead is inside the Cordova Bay community plan area, making it inconvenient for the company to attend all planning meetings.

Oak Bay man dies in mishap

A man killed when his pickup truck struck a culvert and overturned Sunday afternoon at Bowser north of Qualicum has been identified as Collin Edward Arndt, 28, of 870 St. Patrick, Oak Bay.

Glenna Ewing, 21, of Nanaimo, was a passenger in the truck and the Jaws of Life had to be used to free her from the wreckage.

She was taken to Nanaimo Regional Hospital and transferred to Victoria General Hospital on Monday. She is reported in poor condition.

Parksville RCMP said the Arndt four-wheel drive truck was southbound on rain-slicked Highway 19 when it went out of control near the Royal Canadian Legion building at Bowser.

The vehicle struck the right shoulder, skidded across the highway and hit a culvert.

Police said the truck vaulted into the air and landed on its roof, demolishing it and trapping Arndt and Ewing inside.

CFRE outlines finance, program plans

The directors of the CFRE Public Broadcasting Society meet today with the deputy ministers of education and science, universities and education to give the provincial government financial and programming details of their plan for a Victoria TV station on Channel 10.

Their 30-page brief proposes that CFRE lease the unused CBC building at Kings and Blanshard. Ideally, the CBC would lease it directly to the society, the brief states.

If the corporation continues with its announced plans to sell, then CFRE hopes the city and province could buy it and lease it back to the organization, with CFRE's eventual aim to repurchase from the governments. CFRE estimates the building will cost $2 million.

CFRE outlines a proposed first-year operating budget of $2.4 million and when fully developed, the station would employ 80 fulltime people on a budget of $4.8 million. CFRE is hoping for government funding to cover 35 per cent of its budget.

It aims to sell $5 memberships to 20,000 people and raise $1 million from further public donations and corporate contributions. Special fund raising events would bring in another $275,000.

Programming concepts suggested in the brief include a morning show called Western Wakeup from 5 a.m. to 9 a.m. weekdays, including weather reports, news, nutritional and shopping information, rental listings and physical education instruction.

There would also be a nightly one-hour News Journal and on Saturdays a six-hour film festival of Canadian and imported movies starting at 9 p.m.

CFRE would aim for 40 per cent locally-produced programs and 70 per cent Canadian content at all times.

Sit-in by crew in pay hassle

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — Three Filipino crew members of a Liberian-registered freighter docked in North Vancouver are refusing to leave the ship until a pay dispute is resolved.

Gerry McCullough, an inspector with the International Transport Federation, which investigates such disputes, said the ship's captain is keeping two sets of books — one showing the crew is being paid wages agreed to by the ITF and the other showing the actual wages paid.

McCullough said ITF wages call for about $1,400 a month while the actual wages in this case range to a low of $200 a month.

The crew also says there are bad conditions and lack of decent food on the ship, he said.

McCullough said the ship could be picketed by the three, effectively stopping loading or unloading.

The ship, the Atlas, is chartered by Seaboard Shipping Co. Ltd. as a lumber carrier to Europe but Seaboard is not involved directly in the wages dispute.

A Seaboard spokesman said the ship is chartered by his company from Atlantic Lines and Navigation Co. in Panama who chartered it from Chi Grace Navigation Inc. It is registered with the Chi Yeun Co. Ltd. with Monrovia listed as its port of registry.

Popp faces sentencing

A 44-year-old Victoria businessman will be sentenced Wednesday in county court for three offences.

Judge E.J.C. Stewart said Monday he wanted time to consider the submissions of defence counsel David Lisson and Crown counsel Richard Law and the evidence given in the sentencing proceeding of William Terrence Popp.

Popp pleaded guilty to being unlawfully in the dwelling of Norma Elizabeth Witters on Summit Street with intent to commit an indictable offence, forcible seizure and confinement of his wife Carol Ann Popp and assault causing bodily harm to her.

Lisson described Popp as a good, honest, law-abiding citizen except for a few hours in the early morning of Jan. 12.

He said the case might well be appropriate for a conditional or absolute discharge.

Law said the Crown would view a conditional discharge as a travesty.

He said the Popps had been separated 11 months when the incident occurred. It was not a domestic squabble but a very serious matter which required the attendance of the emergency response team.

He said Popp's evidence varied from witnesses in the house and Mrs. Popp's description of her injuries, including bruises and cuts, was inconsistent with one blow to the face.

Mrs. Popp said he dragged her by her hair to the door and threw her down the steps.

Law said the public cannot be left with the impression that wives can suffer punishment and husbands receive less remonstrance than a stranger from the court.

Before the judge

A 47-year-old man who tried it once too often was given a two-month jail sentence Monday in Victoria provincial court for shoplifting.

Ernest Richard Falconer, 243 Wilson, changed his plea to guilty on a charge of theft under $200.

Crown counsel Clinton Kittle told Judge Gilbert Hogg the incident occurred Feb. 8 shortly after 5 p.m. when Falconer went to the Woolworth's store, 1200 Douglas, and took a carton of cigarettes. He left, but returned to the store a few minutes later, when he stole another two cartons of cigarettes. He was apprehended outside the store by two staff members, Kittle said. Value of the stolen merchandise was placed at $23.82.

Falconer had previous convictions for breaking and entering, theft, possession of an unregistered, restricted weapon, being unlawfully at large, and contributing to juvenile deliquency. He received a 90-day jail term June 9, 1977, for theft under $200 and was fined $100 for the same offence on May 27, 1978.

Judge Lorne Pearce gave a suspended sentence and probation to a 19-year-old woman who pleaded guilty to possession of a knife for the purpose of committing an offence.

Alice Elaine Sylvester, 912 Selkirk, was placed on a year's probation and was ordered not to possess any firearms, ammunition or explosives for five years.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said Sylvester struck a neighbor's door with a knife after she was refused access to her 1½-year-old child. Mulligan said the neighbors, who were babysitting the child, thought the young woman was too drunk to look after baby.

Defence lawyer Steven Kelliher said Sylvester had recently given up a newborn daughter for adoption and had just broken up with her boyfriend. He said because of her distraught state, some neighbors decided to invite her out for some drinks and that Sylvester's younger brother was looking after the child.

Kelliher said it was the same neighbors with whom she went out drinking who refused to turn over the child but that the situation was now all cleared up with the neighbors and the landlord.

A 38-year-old man was declared mentally ill and was remanded for a week for a psychiatric assessment to be performed.

Tom Gordon Harper, 2082 Haultain, is charged with theft of $62,000 from Transcoastal Enterprises Ltd. of Vancouver on March 18. Harper is a roe herring agent on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

He was remanded until next Monday so that an evaluation could be done.

A 41-year-old man was given a six-month jail sentence and Pearce said he would recommend a lifetime driving suspension.

Manuel Oliver Martins, 270 Government, pleaded guilty to impaired driving and two counts of fraud.

The drinking-driving charge followed a March 6 incident in which Victoria police were called to the James Bay Inn parking lot. After breath test readings of .31 and .30 were obtained, Martins was transported to Victoria General Hospital for observation.

Mulligan said Martins had five previous drinking-driving convictions between 1967 and 1979.

The fraud charges were in connection with an April 25 cheque for $561.91 drawn on the Royal Bank of Canada, 1501 Douglas, and a May 2 cheeque for $607.20 cashed by Canada Safeways, 475 Simcoe, belonging to Barker Landscaping and forged by Martins.

Defence lawyer John Green said Martins had a serious drinking problem and remembered nothing about the cheques because of a three-week binge.

Pearce imposed the jail term on the impaired-driving conviction and said he would recommend part of the sentence be served at the Alouette River unit. Pearce handed out suspended sentences on the fraud convictions, placed Martins on 18 months probation and ordered him to make restitution to the bank and Safeway.

However, the judge said his recommendation for a lifetime driving suspension could be reconsidered upon rehabilitation.

Fined $400 each for drinking-driving offences were: Dennis Robert Youell, 19, of 6187 Hunt Road; John Charles Cameron, 29, of 280 Ganges Crescent; Sharon Mona Fagerlund, 47, of North Vancouver; Douglas Ronald Godin, 19, of CFB Esquimalt; Ho Chung Wong, 17, of 4109 Cortez Court and Garfield Edward Thomas, 20, of 646 Admirals.

Blood found on clothes

A Saanich policeman testified in B.C. Supreme Court Monday he found clothing containing dry blood stains in the garbage can at the house of a Sidney man accused of first-degree murder.

Const. James Shultz said he found the clothing, including jacket, sweater, trousers and boots, in a bag in the garbage can at the home of 29-year-old Denis Barry McFadden, charged with first-degree murder of Marion Barbara MacKay, 31, on March 17.

He also examined and photographed MacKay's house on Old West Saanich Road and believed there had been a struggle.

He received a vial of blood taken from MacKay's body which showed an alcohol content of .04 per cent, or the equivalent of six ounces of wine.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang, in opening the case, told the jury first-degree murder means a killing is planned and deliberate, or takes place in the course of certain offences such as rape and indecent assault.

Jury sequestered in pot trial

The jury in the county court trial of eight men accused of importing 33½ tons of marijuana near Tofino a year ago was sequestered in a Victoria hotel overnight after failing to render a verdict in five hours and 45 minutes deliberation Monday.

Deliberations at the Law Courts were to resume today at 9 a.m.

The jury retired to consider its verdict at 11.55 a.m. Monday after hearing a 53-minute address by Judge Montague Drake.

He told the jurors they must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the prosecution, in what has become Victoria's longest criminal trial, has proved all the essential elements in the indictment beyond a reasonable doubt.

In addition to the accusation of importing marijuana into Canada between April 1 and May 23, 1979, the men are charged with possession of marijuana May 22, 1979, for the purpose of trafficking.

Drake, dealing with the definition of importing, instructed the jury as a matter of law that it is irrelevant if the ultimate destination of the cargo was another country.

As to the second charge, he said the jury was concerned now only with the question of whether the men were in possession of marijuana. If it was found they were, then a second phase of the trial would be entered in which the men have the onus for proving the purpose was not trafficking.

Possession, he said, meant they knew it was a forbidden drug and they were in a position to exercise some control over it. Possession was not the same as ownership, it was custody rather than title.

Dealing with the defences offered at the trial, Drake ruled that as a matter of law it was not necessary to consider botanical evidence of whether there was one kind or three kinds of cannabis marijuana.

The defence had argued that the Narcotic Control Act specified cannabis sativa and therefore cannabis indica and ruderalis were not forbidden and it was also doubtful just what the cargo actually was.

Drake said the B.C. Court of Appeal has upheld an earlier county court decision that Parliament meant all forms of cannabis when it made its definition in the Narcotic Control Act.

He must follow that decisiomn and he instructed the jury as a matter of law to do likewise.

The defence of distress, or as Drake preferred to call it, the defence of immunity, revolved around whether the ultimate destination of more than 600 bales aboard the Panamanian freighter Samarkanda was Canada or Alaska.

The defence said there was no intention to come to Canada and the ship only did so because of emergency mechanical difficulties.

But Drake said the Samarkanda was only immune under a rule of international law, which was not absolute, insofar as Canada was prepared to waive its laws, for example, if a customs officer gave the ship 48 hours to leave Canada. But this didn't happen and RCMP conducted a raid and arrests.

There was a third defence, he said, under common law which holds that in highly exceptional circumstances, a criminal act will be excused. He said the law of necessity can only apply in a case of clear and imminent peril, a life-or-death situation, where it became impossible to stay outside Canadian waters.

While that defence existed, he said, there has been no recorded case where it has been successful.

The defence of necessity was whether or not a conviction was justified if it was found to be an extreme case.

Drake also told the jury that the onus was not on the eight men to establish strict proof of necessity. It was quite enough if it raised a reasonable doubt.

The jury returned to the courtroom twice.

Drake responded affirmatively when the jury asked if the defence of necessity can be applied to both charges.

He also replied affirmatively when the jury asked that, if it decided the Samarkanda came into Canadian waters because of genuine necessity, did it apply to the possession charge. Drake added that necessity was a plea in abstract, "yes I did it but I was excused."

Four of the eight men standing trial were aboard the Samarkanda, which sailed into Sydney Inlet, 50 kilometres northwest of Tofino, under the guidance of the Seattle pleasure cruiser Whitecap.

Aboard the Samarkanda were William Francis Perka, 35, and Stephen Earl Johnson, 34, of Port Townsend, Wash.; William Terry Hines, 39, San Rafael, Calif.; and Marco Antonio Lopera Penagos, 60, Mellin, Colombia.

Charges against 15 Colombian crewmen were dismissed a month ago and they returned to their homeland.

Aboard the Whitecap were Paul Oscar Nelson, 27, of Seattle and Marina del Rey, Calif.; Michael Walter Butler, 28, Westport, Wash.; Jaime Marin, 38, Marina del Rey; and Albergipson Frasser-Afanador, 39, Los Angeles.

Sask. centres success, CHA told

Regina and Saskatoon have convention centres which have been an asset to tourism and a boost to local residents, the president of Canadian Hotel Association said here today.

"No question about it," said Harvey Smith, a Saskatoon hotel owner, when asked if the twin projects had helped the two cities.

Here to chair the annual general meeting of the association, Smith was asked about the controversial convention and trade centres proposed for the Vancouver and Victoria waterfronts.

Delegates heard Monday night from Dr. Gordon Shrum, chairman of the provincial government task force behind the Vancouver project, who outlined the international marketplace aspect of the centre.

Saskatchewan's two centres were built by the province as 1967 centennial projects. Saskatoon's is run by the city and in Regina, the capital city, the centre is operated by the province. The senior government took over because of early financial problems, Smith said.

Both have since been successful, he added, although they are smaller than the project planned for Vancouver. Each has an auditorium with a 2,000-seat capacity as well as related convention facilities and display space.

The $8-million centre planned for Victoria would seat about 1,500 convention delegates.

Smith said the principal topic of concern to CHA delegates is a piece of American legislation which disallows expenses of convention delegates as tax deductible if they meet outside the continental United States.

The CHA has the support of both Prime Minister Trudeau and Sen. Edward Kennedy in its campaign against the measure.

"We have every hope that this bill will be repealed this summer," Smith said.

The American Hotel and Motel Association — which ironically has planned its 1982 convention for Vancouver — is also a backer of repeal. They support the CHA on this issue because a number of large hotel chains operate in both countries, Smith said.

Federal workers hold rally

Federal public service employees at HMC Dockyard in Esquimalt held a demonstration at noon today to protest a lack of action on contract talks.

The 400 clerical, regulatory and data process personnel have been without a contract since last November.

Talks between the Public Service Alliance of Canada and the federal Treasury Board broke off May 30, union regional representative John Hart said today.

"It doesn't look like there will be any more either," he added.

Hart said the government offered the 52,000 employees in that component across Canada a five-per-cent wage increase in each year of a two-year agreement. That offer was increased at a later stage to seven per cent each year but only on the condition that the union's demands for a shorter work week and other benefits be dropped, Hart said.

The PSAC has asked for a conciliation board to be appointed but nothing has been done, he said.

There are 1,250 members of the component on Vancouver Island, about 1,000 in Victoria.

A general rally is planned for July 7 at the Union Centre on Quadra, Hart said, to focus attention on the employees' contract dispute.

Hart said there is a possibility of other action, such as study sessions.

Watchdog group to keep eye on future harbor development

PETTIGREW . . . own proposal

The ad hoc group of Victorians opposing a waterfront convention centre has formed a permanent organization to act as a watchdog on harbor development.

Founding of the Victoria Harbor Society was announced Monday by Dave Smith and Marjorie Pettigrew, who headed the Open Inner Harbor Committee which sprang up in the wake of controversy about the centre's Wharf Street site.

To emphasize that they are in favor of a convention centre for the city, and only oppose a waterfront location, society directors made a proposal of their own.

At the press conference in the Queen Victoria Inn, owned by society director Peter Hartnell, they urged the city and provincial government to move the convention centre to the block behind the Executive House hotel, along Humboldt.

They said the society has retained Victoria architect Thomas Stark at its own expense to prepare conceptual drawings of a convention centre on this site.

Mrs. Pettigrew, curator of the Helmcken House museum in Victoria, said the society envisioned a terraced development on the sloping property, possibly combined with a transportation terminal and office space.

Because of its location, buildings on the property could be highrise.

She said it would be within walking distance of major hotels and downtown businesses and merchants would still receive the benefit of the project.

Regarding the so-called Reid site at Wharf and Fort, the three-acre provincial government property originally selected for the convention centre, Smith said the society is not opposed to development there.

"We would like to see something done with it, but only if the public's in on it," he said.

As long as views of the harbor are not blocked, the society would be in favor of some project acceptable to the public.

The society, which is to be registered under the Societies Act next week, is open to the public at $5 for an annual membership. Smith, Pettigrew and Hartnell will serve as a pro tem executive until an election involving the general membership can be held.

Four main objectives were announced by the society:

— Preserve the natural historical aspects of the harbor.

— Bring about full public participation in any decisions affecting the harbor.

— Formulate a development plan for the Inner Harbor through public hearings and a referendum.

— Retain and reinstate the green belt areas on the harbor. (Both the convention centre site and the former CPR property along Belleville were purchased five years ago with green belt funds, but lost that status in 1978.)

Ocean Falls future bright

VANCOUVER (CP) — A consultant's report shows Ocean Falls Corp. could become a major logging headquarters on the coast with employment matching the former pulp and paper days, says Ray Williston, president of B.C. Cellulose Co.

About 410 employees at the Crown-owned mill produced pulp and paper until a March decision to close the operation because outdated equipment and wood supply problems led to huge financial loses.

Instead, the government said it would proceed with a two-year experiment in producing wood timbers and chips, and ordered a study into the feasibility of using low-quality wood in the mid-coast region.

Ocean Falls Corp. previously was forced to buy all its raw material on the open market because it had no timber-cutting rights.

Government officials said if the new experiment were successful, it could lead to construction of a $300-million bleached-kraft pulp mill producing about 600-tons a day.

Williston, resources minister in the government of former premier W.A.C. Bennett, said he spent Monday with consultants going over the recently-completed wood review.

"I can honestly say I'm buoyed up," he said. "The initial analysis is optimistic and I'm encouraged with the results."

He said there are enough possible logging operations within commuting distance of Ocean Falls, and "the town looks like it could be a major headquarters for loggers and could have as many people as it did with the pulp mill."

Williston is scheduled to meet Wednesday with officials of the economic development, labor and forests ministries to discuss the report.

He also said the original time allocated for the experiment will have to be extended over five years now because of several factors, including time needed to construct logging roads. He said the project is being proceeded with carefully to avoid pitfalls.

Williston said once the viability of the initial project is proved, then construction of a pulp mill will go ahead, using mostly cedar wood chips. Using a preponderance of cedar in the process will result in "a mill that has never been built before."

Party paying for Barrett's trip

NDP Leader Dave Barrett said Monday the party, not James Rhodes, former chairman of the B.C. Energy Commission, will pick up the tab for his two-week trip to Japan.

"The party will pay for Mr. Stupich (MLA Dave Stupich) and I in terms of airfare and hotel bills," Barrett said.

"I will pay for my wife's trip. I want to thank Mr. Rhodes for his efforts and that is it."

Barrett said Rhodes and John Southworth, former executive officer of the B.C. Energy Board, will be responsible for their own expenses.

Barrett, who plans to meet heads of Japanese labor organizations and energy, coal, forestry and steel industries June 14-30, came under fire from his own caucus when he told reporters that a consulting company owned by Rhodes would pay for most of the trip.

Alex Macdonald (NDP — Vancouver East) said he was perturbed to hear that Barrett wasn't too sure where Rhodes intended to get the money to pay for the trip and that the source of the funds should be made public.

Barrett said the trip is too important to become caught up in a controversy.

Mainland teams sweep meet

Operation Trackshoes track meet for the mentally handicapped ended Sunday with Lower Mainland teams taking home top honors.

The meet, held at University of Victoria's Centennial Stadium, was won by Beacon Services of New Westminster in the adult division. Second place was taken by Clover Valley of Surrey.

Sunny Cedars of Coquitlam captured the school title and in second spot was Simon Cunningham school of Surrey.

The track meet was entered by 750 competitors, including a large number participants from Greater Victoria and around Vancouver Island.

Sportsmanship awards were won by Mission in the adult division and by Christopher Robins school of Nanaimo in the junior division.

Dr. Scott Wallace was guest speak at a banquet attended by 1,050 people Saturday night at UVic.

No longer will Pierre Cardin be content to design mere wardrobes. Now he's redesigning automobiles — but only for the discerning and the rich. He unveiled his "Evolution I" in New York — a hand-crafted, luxury Cadillac Eldorado with 20 coats of hand-applied lacquer, mahogany dashboard, 100 percent virgin wool carpeting, light-sensitive sun roof, hand-stitched fully electric seats, and a wet bar with Waterford crystal glassware in the rear seat armrest. Cardin says only 300 of his masterpieces will be produced and he reserves the right to refuse to sell to anyone he feels might "abuse or blemish the image of this fine motor car." The price — $55,000 up.

Cardin

What do you give your mother when her upcoming book features a cover photo of the two of you in bathing suits? Well, Sylvester Stallone sent his mom about 100 pounds of chocolates and nuts in honor of her new book on beauty. Jacqueline Stallone said the book jacket is expected to show a color photograph of her and the star of Rocky in bathing suits. "The publishers gladly accepted the photo I gave them, which is unusual," she said. "They went wild over it."

A man whose sight was restored by a lightning bolt saw his granddaughters for the first time today. Edwin E. Robinson, 62, of Falmouth, Maine, lost his sight and most of his hearing in an accident nine years ago and had never seen granddaughters Kimberly Robinson, 9, and Christina Robinson, 8, of Lincondale, Va. He regained those facilities when a lighning bolt knocked him unconscious last week. He appeared today on the ABC television program Good Morning, America and the producers flew Robinson and his wife to Virginia after the program, where they are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Lee Robinson and the two girls.

Sporting cowboy boots and snap-button shirts, hundreds of Houston socialites mobbed the California premiere of Urban Cowboy and a party afterward for its star, John Travolta. About 1,800 people paid the $125 ticket price to rub shoulders with the cast at the movie's first screening. Later, 3,500 people packed a party at Gilley's, the nearby Pasadena club where much of the movie was filmed.

abby

Dear Abby:

Thank you for using your column last summer to remind people never to leave their pets in the car during the hot summer months. Will you please do as much for children?

So often children are told to wait in the car while Mother goes into an air-conditioned store for what she thought would take only a few minutes, but she's delayed and doesn't get back until an hour later.

Leaving youngsters in a car unattended is cruel and thoughtless.

As the song goes, "Bless the beasts and the children, for in this world they have no choice, they have no voice."

Concerned

Dear Concerned:

Read on for a letter from a clergyman:

Dear Abby:

I am writing to tell you about a strange coincidence. I quote from your column last August:

Dear Pet Owners:

With summer here, please do not take your pet along for the ride and leave it locked in the car while you run errands and shop.

When the temperature is 85 degrees outside, the temperature inside a parked car (even with the windows slightly open) will reach 102 degrees within 10 minutes. And in 30 minutes it will reach 120 degrees!

The normal body temperature of a dog is approximately 102 degrees; it can withstand approximately 108 degrees for a very short time before suffering irreparable brain damage or death.

Never leave a pet in a parked car in the sun--even with the windows open.

Abby, on the same day in the same newspaper, this news release appeared: "Bond was set at $10,000 each yesterday for an Ohio couple charged with second-degree murder after their 2 1/2-month-old son apparently suffocated in a car at Mammoth Cave National Park.

The couple had left the infant in the car while they went on a three-hour cave tour. The temperature outside the car was in the 90s, and observers said the windows were left open about 2 inches!

Abby, now that summer is here again, please emphasize the importance of protecting children as well as pets. I am sure you can put this better than I have.

Dear Abby:

How would you define "old age"?

Bill Herrick

Dear Bill:

You need your glasses to find your glasses, you walk into another room and wonder what you went there for, people start telling you you're looking good, but no one says you're good-looking, you pass up a romantic encounter because you're worried about your heart, you think today's policemen look like kids.

Young, fresh and over hill by age of 16

By MARY DESCHAMPS
New York Times

NEW YORK — Caitlin Abramovitz was biking in Central Park after school one day last summer when she was spotted by an editor from Seventeen magazine. A few months later, the 13-year-old eighth-grader was on the cover of the magazine's March issue.

Abramovitz is part of a new generation that has recently emerged in the modeling industry — teenagers. They are 12- to 16-year-olds who can be made to look much older, and, say fashion photographers and editors, can best convey the new healthy look that is in demand now.

Models usually begin working in their late teens or early 20s, but now about 20 per cent of the models at major agencies such as Ford, Elite and Wilhelmina are in their early teens.

"There's a whole new legion of Brooke Shields clones coming along," says the fashion photographer John Peden, referring to the model and actress who started it all. "Everyone was tired of the contrived look, and they started using young girls because they looked fresh."

"Fashion changes, and right now the look is young and wholesome," says Eileen Ford, founder of the Ford Models Agency.

SHIELDS
. . . she's the clone

"What is the most sellable now is a real seductive baby face," explained Lisa Branigan, one of the agents at Elite Modeling Agency.

Editors at Seventeen are on the lookout for promising faces even after regular office hours, and if they spot someone with potential — such as Abramovitz — they may give them a business card and organize testings. "Quite often it's by happenstance," said Kathleen Patane, model editor at Seventeen, who explained that when she had some free time she went out looking "around places where kids hang out," like Central Park after classes and on weekends or the neighborhoods around the city's schools.

The score of teen-agers at Ford are given special attention because Ford also believes that a "girl that age belongs at home and in school, modeling only when she can."

"I try and make these girls behave like professional women," said Nancy Menis, the head of the new Ford venture, explaining that the main advantage of the teen-age model is her wide range. "You throw a pair of jeans on a girl and you have a 12-year-old, you dress her up and you get a 20-year-old."

"But it's a very iffy situation," added Menis, who has to take into consideration parents as well as the girls' school commitments. Summer is the busiest season for the teen-age models because their schedules are much more flexible, allowing them to work full-time instead of just in between classes.

In general, parents, usually mothers, are closely involved with their young daughters' budding careers.

Since her 13-year-old daughter Kimberly joined the Ford agency five weeks ago, Sharon Hynes has been driving in to New York with her from New Jersey for each booking. "It's fun for her because she's in the limelight, but I'm usually double-parked in the car," said Hynes, who admits that the lucrative aspect of the arrangement is "one of the main reasons we're doing this."

Rates for the teen-age models are the same as for adult models, starting at $100 an hour and in some cases going as high as $2,000 a day.

At 15, Lisanne Falk is one of the Ford agency's top teen-age models. Falk gets around town on her own. But then she has been modeling since she was 10. "Modeling helped me get over my shyness," said Falk, dressed in a Hawaiian shirt and baggy jeans during a recent interview. Falk is scheduled to appear in the August issue of Harper's Bazaar, which is featuring a special section on new young faces.

In person and in their photographs, most of these young models look older than they are; they also act older, which has led some editors to voice disapproval of the trend.

"It doesn't give them a chance to be really kids," said an editor from Mademoiselle magazine, who added: "We try and stay away from using youngsters, but some of these kids are so beautiful you can't help but use them."

One such versatile 12-year-old is Kristine Oulman. With the Ford agency until recently, Oulman just switched to the Elite Modeling Agency.

At Elite there are at least 30 models who can run the gamut from posing on rollerskates to assuming some of the more sophisticated looks of high fashion.

"Because she's so young, it's easy for Kristine to keep her two lives separate," says her mother, Pam Oulman, who moved to New Jersey from South Dakota last October. Oulman, whose move was not related to Kristine's modelling, which began only three months ago, accompanies her daughter to most appointments. "When you're given a chance like that you should go ahead with it even if it doesn't last a long time," she maintained.

Because a teen-ager can undergo such drastic physical changes in so short a period of time — literally outgrowing her particular look — not all these young girls will still be going strong after 30.

In fact, some may even be over the hill at 16. Due to the stringent height requirements, if a model has not grown to at least five feet seven inches by the time she reaches her late teens, she will have to quit.

"It's fun while it lasts," said 16-year-old Cindy Gibb, who after three years with Ford is still five-foot-four and plans to go on to college instead of pursuing her modeling career. "It's easier to know now than waiting around for those few extra inches."

Acupuncture is no cure for deafness

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Our 6-year-old daughter was born with deafness in one ear. The doctors say it is a nerve deafness and that nothing can be done about it. We heard recently that acupuncture can cure this. There is an acupuncture doctor in our city, but we would prefer going to an acupuncture specialist that does ears only.

Mrs. C.R.

Dear Mrs. R.:

Many parents, like yourself, make the most extravagant sacrifices in order to provide treatments that are outside the realm of orthodox medicine. It is understandable that parents want to exhaust every possible avenue before giving up and accepting the reality of an incurable condition.

There was a premature flurry of excitement when it was first reported that sensory-neural deafness could be cured by acupuncture. Those who were desperate, especially when both ears were affected, had their hopes raised only to have them dashed when the results did not fulfill their promise.

A recent study by a group of reliable otologists, specialists in ear problems, failed to show any improvement in the hearing of those patients who were treated by acupuncture.

Despite these findings, undoubtedly many people like yourself will still expose themselves to acupuncture treatment in the hope that their case might prove the exception. I know of no acupuncture therapist who devotes himself solely to ear problems.

Since her hearing is excellent in the other ear, she can live a normal, productive and happy life with little or no adjustment.

Dear Doctor:

Is alcohol the only cause for cirrhosis of the liver?

Miss R.P.

Dear Miss P.:

There are a number of different types of cirrhosis of the liver. Probably the major reason for this severe disease is chronic alcoholism. Yet infections of the liver, and exposure to poisons and drugs can, in severe cases, cause the scarring and cirrhotic changes that interfere with the proper functioning of the liver. In rare instances, cirrhosis has been attributed to untreated diseases of the gallbladder and to marked obesity.

Delicate blood studies and liver profile tests can now accurately pinpoint the cause and nature of cirrhosis. Biopsies of the liver, ultrasonic studies and enzyme tests now furnish enormous knowledge about this condition and the possibility of its control and cure.

Plain looks may hide swan stage

looking great

By RENA PAUL

Dear Rena:

I'm 15 and as plain as a pumpkin. The only date I've ever been on is when by best friend wanted to ditch a date and I filled in (guaranteeing he'd never phone again, I guess). Looking at beauty magazines just makes me feel worse! I bet you can't do a thing for me!

Betty K.

Dear Betty:

Remember the "Ugly Duckling" story? Well just keep it in mind! Until you reach the swan stage, though, I sympathize. I too used to be a child that only a mother could love! You don't say what you feel are your negative features. Sometimes a change of hairstyle can do wonders. Don't wear it long if it's thin and stringy or bangs if you have oily skin or a round face. There are many "tricks of the beauty trade" which we can use to make us look better. We can't all be raving beauties but we certainly all can convey a feeling of elegance and charm if we use to best advantage whatever we've got! Take heart. If you like, send me a photo and we can work together to see what we can do about your image.

Rena

Dear Rena:

My problem may seem incredibly mundane but it's been a nuisance to me for years. I'm an executive with a large international corporation and tend to wear dark suits for business. The blanket of dandruff on my shoulders is not only annoying but undermines the image I must maintain. I've been to my family doctor but he told me not to worry about it and to just get some anti-dandruff shampoo. It's not doing much good. Do you have a suggestion?

Jim B.

Dear Jim:

Dandruff is a form of psoriasis. You should see a dermatologist if the condition has persisted for a long period of time. Yours may be a particularly difficult case. Dandruff, as you know, is the result of an unnaturally fast turnover of skin cells. These cells are then shed from the surface in the form of dandruff. Anti-dandruff products decrease the skin cell turnover rate and are based on one of three substances, the tars, zinc pyrithione and selenium. Besides retarding the skin cell turnover, there is another method which relies on the chemical's ability to peel away the top layers of dead cells before they have a chance to flutter around your ears. The trick, as with anti-perspirants, is to switch around. The body being the clever devil it is, gets used to one product and the treatment quickly loses its effectiveness. So don't stick with the same compound too long. Buy several and alternate them from day to day. I hope it works! In a pinch, try wearing a pale suit — at least for the summer!

Short-sleeved, classy dress shirt for summer

By PHYL FELDKAMP
Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK — Giving up a tie would be too much to ask. In most business situations, convention demands a necktie. So men go on encircling their necks with what amounts to six or eight thicknesses of material, no matter how hot it may be in the conference room.

This summer the sweltering executive at least has the opportunity to wear a short-sleeved dress shirt under his suit jacket. Men who live in warm climates and who put comfort first have been wearing short-sleeved shirts with neckties for years. But for others cooling off while wearing a dress shirt — the kind designed to go under vested three-piece suits — has meant rolling up the long sleeves, a lapse of dignity that most corporate presidents frown upon.

The introduction of dress shirts with small rounded or squared collars and short sleeves in white Jacquard, voile and striped broadcloth by such designers as Yves Saint Laurent is to be welcomed, even if the formality of wearing a tie still has to be preserved. A short-sleeved dress shirt in one of the new bright colors (turquoise...fuchsia...Parma violet, anyone?) suggested by progressive menswear creators would be, well, pressing matters a bit much in most business circles. Art directors of advertising agencies and interior designers can be this venturesome where the investment counselor would need to watch it.

Freer uses of color nonetheless are among the new directions in summer menswear. Also cited by the Men's Fashion Association of America are silkier suitings, often used in combination with slubbed or nubby textures.

In sportswear, where even the conservative man will let loose a little, color combinations can be imaginative. Strong brights and pastels abound, and unbridled contrasts will not raise any eyebrows.

In workaday clothes, the tendency toward fabrics with a violet cast is pronounced. Without entering another mauve decade, menswear materials are taking on a purplish tinge.

This often results from the interweaving of two complementary colors — one for the warp, one for the woof — in the iridescent materials that have the requisite fashionable gleam. Pure silk suits, like those of Cerutti, give off a subtle shimmering light. Less expensive blends of rayon or polyester with a percentage of silk achieve like results. Even rough-textured lines and slubbed materials have a silky look.

youth clinic

Dear Mr. Vichert:

I am a 15-year-old boy. I'm afraid to ask girls to go out with me in case they say no. Or if they do say yes, I am shy and cannot carry on an intimate or even casual conversation with them and we break up the next day.

This leaves me depressed for days and interferes with school and my family life. Could you please tell me how to rid myself of these fears and hang-ups?

Answer: Sometimes our feelings about ourselves become very complicated. No matter how hard we try, nothing seems to work, and it begins to seem that we cannot achieve the goals we had set. At this time it is wise to ask someone else for some help.

Talking to another person, or receiving some professional counselling can help find answers or ways to solve problems that we hadn't thought of. There are youth counselling services and family service agencies, that have staff who are particularly able to help young people.

At 15 it is natural to feel some shyness in asking a girl out, and I also think it is natural to worry about having a conversation. Both of these things, dating and talking, improve with practice.

When you start dating you have to take your chances, some people will accept and others will say no. If you don't ask, because you are afraid of being turned down, you certainly cut your chances. Find someone who you think has some of the same interests as yourself — this will make conversation easier. Also only plan for one date — if things don't work out, you won't be disappointed, and if things do work out, then ask for the next date.

Dear Rev. Cotter:

Some time ago I started to date a girl who is of a different religion. We have had to keep it a secret from her parents but everything has been working out just fine.

Then she received a letter inviting her and an escort to a party. She can't take me and her parents insist she go. I couldn't go because her parents know many of the people at the party, so I suggested she take someone else.

I trust her but I wonder if we should tell her parents we are going out. If we tell her parents what should we say?

Answer: It would be a lot easier to advise you if you would say what your respective religions are. If you are both Christian, then I would ay your parents have to face up to the social fact that people of different denominations pair off today. But if you are one from a very strict Christian sect and the other from a very strict non-Christian religion, then you had better choose between your families and each other.

Some people believe that families are falling apart because of the dilution of religious sanctions. Others believe that many "religious" sanctions are harmful in their effects on genuine acceptance of the self and of others. Take your choice.

Breastplate look seen for the fall

By MARYLUTHER
Los Angeles Times

The best bets for fashion success next fall come from Milan, Paris, London, New York and Los Angeles, and they include the breastplate look.

The breastplate is by a Japanese designer who works in Paris.

A breastplate? A best-selling breastplate? In the midst of the recession?

The truth, they say, is sometimes stranger than fiction.

And the truth about the breastplate is that it separates Paris design from the rest of the world. For Issey Miyake and young French designers such as Thierry Mugler, the breastplate symbolizes the first real step out of the past into the future.

In the city where at least part of fashion is still considered an art form, this move away from retro into science fiction is something roughly equivalent to the cast from Happy Days transmigrating to star in Buck Rogers in the 25th Century.

Miyake's molded-plastic breastplate that comes with a printed cotton sarong skirt for $1,000 won't be the hottest-selling item in America next fall, but the concept is a best bet for success, and spinoffs of the idea are sure to tempt young fashion customers eager to get on to the business of wearing their own clothes instead of their mothers' hand-me-downs.

ENAMEL BROOCH and earring suite valued at $4,000, a wedding gift to Mary Bagley, lady-in-waiting, from Her Royal Highness Princess Alexandra in 1868 is encircled by $2,800 Tudor Rose necklase by Carlo Doria of London, circa 1865, while Judy Hansen examines antique Holbin style sapphire pendant with enamel, priced at $14,725. Items are part of Peoples Jewellers antique collection recently on display in Victoria's Mayfair Mall and now on tour of Canada. Collection, spanning period of 1800 to 1925, emphasizes the Victorian period of English taste. Also included in the collection are selected examples from Russia, Switzerland, France and the U.S.

Plates picked up for profit

TORONTO (CP) — Architect Percy Thorpe and his wife, Katherine, caught plate fever three years ago and their lives haven't been the same since.

They've converted a bedroom of their suburban home into a plate gallery, are decorating the walls of an adjoining bedroom with plates and plan to knock down the wall between to create a larger gallery.

"We buy 12 new plates a year so our collection is growing," Mrs. Thorpe said in an interview. "We collect from nine different manufacturers. The idea is to have a complete series of a particular manufacturer."

The hobby began after a visit to Yorkshire, England, where Mr. Thorpes' father was buying collector's plates as a hedge against inflation.

"But we go for the masterful artwork and the thrill of the hunt," Thorpe said. "Collector's plates are art forms.

"The innovation of theme is important to us. We don't want a reproduction of a painting in the Louvre. We want to see something new."

They paid $14,000 for their 70-plate collection and its value has grown over three years to $18,000.

The Thorpes say their hobby has become one of the fastest growing in Canada in the last two years because plates are decorative, more useful than paintings, easy to maintain, not damaged by sunlight or fingerprints — and they increase in value.

Collector's plates range from less than $20 to more than $350 each and can commemorate a special event or simply be fine art on china, crystal, pewter, copper, silver or wood.

Usually, they're a limited edition; that is, production is limited to the year, as in Christmas or Mother's Day plates; limited to a specific number of firing days by the manufacturer; limited to a specific quantity and often are accompanied by a certificate or authenticity.

Generally, the more limited the edition, the more valuable the plate.

But as sophistication develops among Canadian collectors, so do their beefs.

"We suffer in Canada," Thorpe said. "We get only 10 per cent of any issue of plates. If a manufacturer issues a limited edition of 5,000, Canada gets 500.

"It's market saturation. They sell more to the U.S. with its population of 220 million compared to Canada's 23,742,000. The U.S. gets 90 per cent of the issue."

Once obtained, however, the plates can be easily converted into cash. Bradford Exchange Ltd., a trading centre for collector's plates that opened 18 months ago in London, Ont., buys and sells plates and puts out a bimonthly publication.

New synthetics pleasing

TORONTO (CP) — To some women, polyester is a dirty word.

They immediately think of tacky, double-knit pantsuits, crimplene dresses and fabrics that blind with their shine.

But the days of cheap-looking, sleazy-feeling polyesters are over.

Designers and manufacturers have suddenly discovered that polyester, rayon and acetate are not only practical, in many cases they can look as good as real cotton, linen, wool or silk.

The new synthetics crease less than natural fibres — pure linen and cotton can have all the appeal of an unmade bed — and are machine washable which keeps drycleaning costs down.

Oil-based polyesters (rayon is wood based) were invented in Britain in 1941 but are considered a post-war phenomenon. By 1953, they were being marketed in the U.S. by Du Pont under the Dacron label and in Britain as Terylene.

Then, polyesters were clammy, hot and shiny. And, says Toronto designer Hugh Garber, "they reeked of plastic, they smelled cheap and they looked cheaper."

On the plus side, polyester, no matter how hideous, proved resistant to moths and mildew, was washable, could be drip-dried and easily "touch" ironed.

However, modern polyesters — especially those from Japan where technology has particularly advanced — are as different from those early double-knits as chalk is from cheese.

Garber, who has a collection of 60-percent polyester and polyester-blends, says some of his wool-like acrylics and silk-like polyesters are as good as the real thing.

"I have some acrylics with a wool feeling that women allergic to wool like," he says. "And my polyesters look like silk but outperform it.

In common with so much that is beautiful in glassware, art glss cruets originated in the last 20 years of the 19th century. Made in many lovely colors, from extremely delicate pastels to bright hues, the pieces were usually handblown but might also be pressed or pattern moulded. The applied glass decorations with enamelled flowers tend to emphasize the Victorian influence. Generally, the cruets are beautifully designed, with infinite grace and charm in every line; even the names applied to them are appropriate: Peachblow, Burmese, Cut Velvet, Crown Milano, Spangled, Amberina and so on. How could such lovely pieces be used for such a utilitarian purpose? No real answer to that one. Possibly, they were made for decorative use but filled a pressing need for the table. Many reproductions have emerged and there is no doubt Mother of Pearl satin glass, which appeared in many patterns like herringbone, moires and diamond quilting has been copied with greatest frequency. Many types of glass were used in making the originals, including Shell, Agata, Millefiori — even Mary Gregory and, somewhat later, the delightful Iridescent glass.

Less plentiful than formerly, there are still a fair number of choice pieces around — usually in sound condition. Those I have had the good fortune to observe were fine examples of craftsmanship; mostly at estate sales. Dealers specializing in Victorian ware can usually offer a selection. Tray auctions as a long shot.

An Art Glass in blue, with a clear handle and stopper $58 in Emerald green $75; Generally, the value range would extend from $45 to $250.

Q. When did Art Nouveau achieve its greatest popularity and are such collectables increasing in value?

T.B.

A. 1895-1905. Yes, interest has reached boom proportions.

Fiery CP Rail crash forces 400 to flee Ontario town

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — All but a handful of the 400 persons, evacuated Monday night because of a threat of leaking sulphur dioxide from a derailed CP Rail freight train, were allowed to return to their homes near here early today.

All fires were extinguished by 5:30 a.m. EDT but residents living near the derailment site were still being kept away as a precaution, an Ontario Provincial Police spokesman said.

London Fire Chief Ray Morley said that while none of the fumes in the air were toxic, officials had feared the fire would spread to a tanker containing the noxious gas, poisonous in concentrated doses.

There were no injuries in the accident, which occurred five kilometres west of Hyde Park, just northwest of London. The westbound train, No. 957, was on its way to Windsor via Sarnia.

A CP Rail official said 102 cars were on the train and 27 of the 34 derailed cars were empty. One of the cars, carrying 75 tons of light oil, burned through the night shooting flames 20 metres into the air.

Three of the derailed cars contained chlorine residue, left after they had been unloaded, and two were fairly close to the fire.

Last November more than 225,000 residents of Mississauga, Ont., were evacuated, some for as long as a week, when a CP Rail train derailed in that city west of Toronto and a tanker filled with chlorine began leaking.

Residents in a subdivision in Kilworth, a mainly-rural area north of London, were evacuated to a city high school and a nearby community centre. Officials said a larger crowd of evacuees had been expected, but many found accommodation with relatives and friends.

Provincial police said the rail car that exploded was an empty propane car.

A CP Rail spokesman said the only car containing sulphur dioxide was near the end of the string of 34 cars that derailed. It stayed upright and no gas leaked.

But at first when it was feared some gas could escape, winds were constantly monitored because a shift in winds could push flames toward the sulphur dioxide tanker, causing it to rupture.

Other chemicals on the train that could have proved hazardous included an unknown asbestos compound and a nitrogen-based fertilizer, which could explode.

Ray Chatland, a spokesman for Dow Chemical Ltd. in Sarnia, said a crew of chemical specialists had been dispatched to the fire to secure the cargo.

The train derailed when part of the security device on the door of an insulated box car failed, allowing the door to fall underneath the train, said CP spokesman Steve Morris.

Jumbo jet's idle too low

TORONTO (CP) — A preliminary investigation into the engine power loss of an Air Canada 747 as it prepared to land at Toronto International Airport on Saturday has revealed that the idling speed on the three engines was set too low.

A spokesman for Air Canada said Monday the investigation showed a continuous fuel flow to all engines and at no time did any of the engines fail, but the low idling speed prevented the engines from responding as expected and resulted in a loss of power.

The idling speeds on the plane were set upwards before it was put back into service Sunday evening on a flight to Frankfurt. Air Canada has said that all of its 747 engines are now being tested to ensure that the idle settings are properly adjusted.

Meanwhile, the president of the Air Traffic Control Association, William Robertson, said Monday that the pilot of the jumbo jet should not have flown another flight to Vancouver later the same night.

He said there ought to be an automatic removal procedure for pilots, similar to the one used for air traffic controllers when they are involved in a traumatic situation, such as a near-accident.

Can't hold lid on apartheid: priest

TORONTO (CP) — An Anglican minister jailed in South Africa after protesting the arrest of a top-ranking religious leader says that although the government there is trying to hold the lid on violent protest against apartheid, the situation is getting increasingly worse.

"The only alternative remaining will be to meet the violence of apartheid with violence until its perpetrators submit," Rev. Thomas Anthony, director of the Anglican Church of Canada's world program, said at a news conference Monday.

"I'm not advocating armed resistance but I think the level of violence has reached the point where most South Africans admit there is now a civil war.

"It may well be that the government is the aggressor in most instances of violence."

Anthony was one of 53 demonstrators arrested May 26 after staging a protest against the arrest of Rev. John Thorne, former president of the South African Council of Churches and a leading opponent of apartheid.

Those arrested, including Rev. Desmond Tutu, secretary-general of the council, and Rev. Timothy Bavin, Bishop of Johannesburg, were charged under the Riotous Assemblies Act after being detained without charges for 14 hours. They face up to two years each in prison.

Western governments must follow the lead of church groups in bringing pressure against the apartheid policy, Anthony said.

"How long it will take depends on what external pressures are brought to bear," he said. "We need to be very clear about where we're prepared to make a stand when it comes to armed conflict, as it will."

Anthony said in addition to black protests, apartheid has been attacked by some white ministers of the Dutch Reformed Church, the only South African Christian church which hasn't taken a stand against the policy.

He said economic sanctions against South Africa have been more successful than is commonly believed.

"When political risk increases, when stability disappears, when civil war is looming, money runs.

"There's some evidence that has already begun to occur. People are not investing in South Africa."

PWA layoffs loom for 65 employees

EDMONTON (CP) — Pacific Western Airlines is laying off up to 15 pilots and 50 stewardesses, Ken Gray, central region vice-president of the Alberta government-owned airline, said Monday.

He said the pilots, who could be out of a job for a year, are being laid off because of reduced demand for cargo flights from the resource industry. He said one of the Hercules cargo planes is being taken out of service.

The stewardess layoffs are caused by a seasonal decline in charter flights, said Gray, adding most of the stewardesses would probably be called back to work in the fall.

He said most of the pilots and 15 of the stewardesses affected are from the Edmonton area.

Aging war vets posing geriatric crisis for feds

PENTICTON (CP) — The federal government is doing its best to meet a mounting "geriatric crisis" as the percentage of Canada's population over the age of 65 increases, says Veterans Affairs Minister Daniel MacDonald.

Society must come to grips now with a growing age group that is experiencing special economic, social and physical problems, MacDonald said Monday in a speech to the Royal Canadian Legion convention.

"These problems are becoming an increasing concern for us in veterans affairs because there is a large number of World War II veterans aged 55 to 65 who will create a noticeable shift in the veteran population in the next five or six years," MacDonald told about 1,800 delegates.

"To meet this eventuality, my deparment has been involved in an in-depth study of its care services."

MacDonald said his department is following a general trend toward keeping the elderly as self-sufficient as possible by providing care in their homes and the community rather than in an institutional setting.

MacDonald also tried to calm concerns expressed by the Legion over the move of veterans' affairs operations to Prince Edward Island from Ottawa.

The move to Charlottetown is being done in carefully-planned stages to keep disruption of services to a minimum.

"I must, however, reemphasize that the government is committed to this move. There is no more time for second-guessing. I am convinced that any further discussions of delay will cause only more uncertainty and confusion

"There has been over the years a continuous call for decentralization in Canada. This government agreed that federalism would be strengthened by moving certain departments and agencies across the country," said MacDonald, who represents the P.E.I. riding of Cardigan.

Ocean rower wherabouts not known

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Steve Kurachi, a 28-year-old American, has become the second man to attempt to row the Atlantic this year but apparently has made no plans for radio contact with Canadian authorities.

"We haven't heard from him," the spokesman said, adding that no arrangements had been made for regular contact.

Kenneth Kerr, a 28-year-old Scot who left St. John's on May 20 aboard a four-metre boat bound for Ireland, was 180 nautical miles northeast of St. John's when last heard from by a radio contact Friday.

Constitutional role debated

HALIFAX (CP) — Calls for change in Canada's constitutional and criminal laws were the order of the day at the opening of the annual meeting of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities on Monday.

Even before the conference could get properly under way, a large number of delegates, many from Ontario, were calling for an immediate debate on the role of municipal government in a renewed Canadian constitution.

A splinter group ended up discussing the issue after losing a vote which called for an immediate debate.

The federation agreed, however, to send the federal government a telegram saying the municipal governments of Canada should have had a voice in the constitutional talks Monday in Ottawa.

Meanwhile, at a workshop on crime prevention, former Ontario ombudsman Arthur Maloney made an emotional appeal for loosening of laws preventing the use of marijuana.

He said social costs, including the threat to civil liberties, the high cost of prison, police and justice administration, make the present laws unfair and unreasonable.

Constitutional talks end in spray of adjectives

By WALTER STEWART
FP News Service

OTTAWA — The prime minister and the 10 premiers who met here Monday to sort out Canada's future huddled behind closed doors, to carry out their deliberations in secret, like a coven of witches.

At first, this seems an insufferable affront. Who the hell do these people think they are, some hothead is bound to ask, that they can carve up the nation as if it were a private birthday cake?

On sober reflection, however, it is clear that the first ministers' reticence was an act of kindness.

The nation was spared the sight of 11 grown men grubbing around all day in a vain effort to come up with something suitable for public display.

When they could not, they decided that common decency dictated a policy of modest stillness and humility.

They were, of course, quite right.

Humility was just about the right note for the political big-shots to strike. Shame might have been better, but humility will do for the moment.

The nation, it has been told, trembles on the brink of ruin. Quebec, a brand recently snatched from the flames of separatism, is still smouldering. Alberta, achoke with oil and righteousness, is almost as restive. Newfoundland has just discovered that the federal government is a sort of clearing-house and odd-job depot for the provinces.

In the circumstances, it was absolutely vital that the honchos meet in Ottawa to clear the air, negotiate the future, chart progress — do something drastic, fast — before the whole joint comes tumbling down around our ears.

So the boys rolled up to 24 Sussex and seven hours later they rolled out again, oozing reassurance and spraying adjectives. There had been "real progress;" there was "momentum," negotiations were "making headway;" there was going to be a "hard summer's work" leading to further meetings in September, and a fruitful future for Confederation.

Codswallop.

The premiers came out of the meeting exactly where they went in, and the prime minister followed suit.

Quebec is upset because the official communique spoke of "the people" — instead of "the peoples" of Canada. Newfoundland, Premier Brian Peckford made clear, salutes the progress made, but of course there is "no way" the province will back off its just demands. Alberta, Premier Peter Lougheed said, has stated its position and means to stick to it. Manitoba, Premier Sterling Lyon wanted the nation to know, was happy to accommodate change, but not, by God, at the expense of seeing language rights entrenched in the constitution. Language rights in the constitution just happens to the bedrock of the federal bargaining position.

Premier Bill Bennett of British Columbia was pleased with the way things were going. His province, naturally, was sticking with its original stance. But this was not a matter of stubborn intransigence. The province just happens to be right in its original stance.

In fact, despite a few encouraging noises from Premier Allan Blakeney of Saskatchewan — one of the nation's optimists — and Premier William Davis of Ontario — the man from Bland — it is clear that nothing worth noting happened at this historic meeting.

Blakeney said "We were pursuing a process," which is always nice, and Davis said everything was coming along fine, just fine, but that is not the sort of thing to send the nation out into the streets with its hair in a braid.

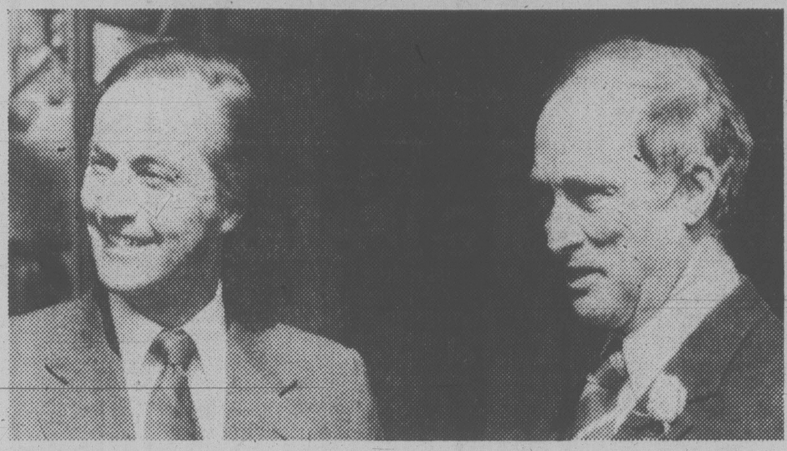
If there was any good news, it was that the boys didn't actually throw crockery at each other. Oh, yes, and they identified the "major problems" facing the negotiators. They are, in fact, the same major problems they have been wrestling with since John A. Macdonald was in swaddling clothes.

When a bunch of people keeps skating around and around and arrive back at the same spot every time, that is not a constitutional conference, it is a roller-derby.

When, after 54 years of meetings on the constitution, the big news bulletin is that the lads who claim to be in control of the process have agreed to meet again, that is not "substantial progress," it is Canadian politics as usual.

Keeping the journalists away from the scene was an act of humanity.

There is only so much even journalists should be required to take.



Bennett and Trudeau are all smiles prior to start of talks

Top Albertan editor quits

CALGARY (CP) — John Reistrup announced Monday that he will resign as editor-in-chief of the Calgary Albertan July 31, the day before it becomes the Calgary Sun.

Reistrup said he does not want to be part of the changes when Toronto Sun Publishing Corp. takes over the newspaper Aug. 1 and renames it the Calgary Sun.

"It's not my bag," said Reistrup, whose experience includes some years with the Washington Post.

Auto pact talks set

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada and the United States will meet June 27 to discuss the operation of the 15-year-old Canada-U.S. auto pact, industry department officials confirmed Monday.

Industry Minister Herb Gray will meet his U.S. counterpart, trade representative Reuben Askew, for a three-hour afternoon session, but officials said the exact agenda is not expected to be set until shortly before the meeting.

The meeting is scheduled for Washington.

"It's not just 'hello and how are you,'" said one official. "It's a high-level discussion."

Aside from raising Canada's alarm over a $4.1 billion auto parts trade deficit in bilateral trade with the U.S., Gray is expected to discuss the impact of overseas vehicle exports to North America.

Gray asked for formal talks with the Americans to secure a so-called "fair share" of auto production, investment and parts sourcing for Canada.

The U.S. does not accept the notion of "fair share" but has indicated willingness to hear the Canadian position. Since the U.S. administration faces an election later this year, neither U.S. nor Canadian officials foresee basic changes in the free trade agreement in auto production.

The bilateral talks have forced postponement of a meeting between Gray and American Motors Corp. officials.

Move delayed for CBC's national news

TORONTO (CP) — The CBC has announced it will postpone moving its evening national television news program to a new time slot for several months.

The CBC said The National will move to a 10 o'clock time slot in September, 1981, rather than January, as originally planned.

Complex technical and production arrangements were cited as the reason.

Trudeau offers to step down if talks succeed

Quebec premier emerged he held a news conference and sprung a new demand — that "any new consitution must recongize the right of Quebec to self-determination."

He also said that the "centrepiece" on constitutional reform must be "the basic fact of duality" of French and English-speaking Canada, and added that such recognition was evident neither in the federal government's approach nor within the perceptions of his fellow premiers.

Premier Peckford also gave some indication of just how difficult reaching any significant final agreement may be.

Peckford maintained that while there was a mood for negotiation evident at the meeting, none of it would be forthcoming from him in two areas he has taken a hard line on — his claim for provincial jurisdiction over offshore petroleum finds and his demand for joint jurisdiction over fisheries.

These areas, he said, "supercede some of the other ones on which I am willing to trade off and move."

Asked how there was going to be enough compromise to get a comprehensive agreement if each premier held one or two items to be non-nogotiable, Peckford replied: "That's a good question."

None of the other provincial leaders appeared quite so bellicose, although Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed said he couldn't work up any enthusiasm for constitutional reform until he reaches an agreement with the Trudeau government over oil-pricing (negotiations are currently stalemated), and Manitoba Premier Sterling Lyon held firm to his contention that entrenchment of rights in a consitution — particularly language rights — would be a mistake.

Lyon's stand is diametrically opposed to even Trudeau's minimum requirements for the prime minister's concept of "renewed federalism."

Premier Bill Bennett of British Columbia said he was impressed by the degree of flexibility shown by his colleagues in the meeting, but his main pleasure arose from the fact that he was confident the stands his province had taken at previous constitutional session were still intact.

The premiers demonstrated their independence by refusing to adopt a rather innocuous "statement of principles" for a new constitution offered by Trudeau, apparently unwilling to concede anything until they get down to bargaining for something in return — the very approach Trudeau is opposed to.

He said he found it "somewhat offensive that we try to barter our various demands as federal or provincial governments in exchange for something that it going to benefit the people in general" — such as a charter of rights or the patriation of the constitution.

But the premiers obviously weren't buying.

The 12 items listed included four under Trudeau's "package for the people" — a statement of principles, a charter of rights, the reduction of regional disparities, and patriation of the constitution.

Under a second "package on government powers and institutions" were listed: resource ownership and interprovincial trade, offshore resources, powers affecting the economy (notably taxing); communications; family law; a new Senate involving the provinces; and revamping of the Supreme Court.

The federal government also proposed separately that native leaders be involved in discussion of constitutional change that involved them.

The negotiating process is to begin June 17, when an organizational meeting of ministers involved in the various areas of contention will be held, probably in Ottawa.

Between June 18 and July 6 the various governments will prepare for "intensive discussions," and from July 7 to July 25 federal and provincial ministers and officials will remain in continuous session, except for weekends, with a fourth week available if necessary.

There would be a break in negotiations from July 26 to Aug. 24 to allow the governments to consider or reconsider their positions, and provincial premiers will meet in Winnipeg on Aug. 21 and 22.

Federal and provincial ministers and officials will again meet between Aug. 25 and Aug. 29, with a week off before the first ministers meet again in Ottawa from Sept. 8 to Sept. 12.

It is then that it will be determined, in Trudeau's words, whether the process has been a "a monumental success or a catastrophic failure.

"If it is a success, we'll be heroes in our own minds. If we don't find any large measure of agreement, then I think it will be a failure indeed, and I think it will have very serious consequences for the rest of history."

Canada firm on fish pact with U.S.

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada will not accept any of the U.S. Senate's "drastic and far-reaching" amendments to fish and boundaries treaties signed with the U.S. government last year, External Affairs Minister Mark MacGuigan said today.

He told the Commons external affairs committee that the amendments suggested by Senator Edward Kennedy and supported by other New England senators would "destroy the balance of the agreements which resulted from long and arduous negotiations in which both sides made significant concessions."

The East Coast fisheries treaty regulates Canadian and American competition for cod, scallops, haddock, pollock and other fish in Georges Bank. The boundary dispute agreement covered limits in the Gulf of Maine, where fishing claims overlap.

The treaty is permanent, but Kennedy has said he wants it limited to three years. He also would like to restrict the area where Canadians fish for scallops.

The treaty must be ratified by the Senate to become law in the U.S. It needs only cabinet approval in Canada.

"The amendments are wholly unacceptable to the Canadian fishing industry, to the provinces concerned and to the federal government," MacGuigan said.

"We are not, as a government, going to negotiate with the United States Senate... and we are not going to renegotiate an already signed treaty...."

He also warned that as long as the treaties are in limbo, there is "a serious risk of confrontation between our respective fishermen on the East Coast."

MacGuigan said that in the last year, American fishermen have expanded their operations in the gulf (of Maine) contrary to the treaty's objectives and if they continue "we will have to take appropriate steps to protect our competitive position."

He did not say what those steps might be but told reporters after committee that actions will be announced periodically after the cabinet has consulted Canadian senators and the opposition.

The impasse did not mean the government had lost faith in bargaining with the U.S.

Some MPs are trying to form a special parliamentary committee which would go to Washington to attempt to resolve the deadlock with U.S. Senate leaders. MacGuigan said he and Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc are reviewing other steps to protect domestic fishing interests.

This duck thinks he's a dog

DUDLEY, England (UPI) — Mike Williams is doing well enough teaching Alex the duck to swim, but it's harder keeping him from chasing dogs with sex in mind.

Alex, a mixed-up mallard who sinks like a stone whenever he gets in the water, was found seriously injured by Birmingham businessman Alan Derby.

Derby cured his injuries, but Alex fell in love with Derby's two labradors, Andy and Bonnie, and took to chasing them around the garden with a gleam in his mallard's eye. In despair Derby turned to Dudley zoo.

"He is getting better at swimming now," keeper Williams said of Alex Sunday, "and we hope eventually he will be back to normal.

"Sorting out his sexual problems may take a little longer."

'Statutory' rape laws discriminate?

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Can California punish men who have sex with females under the age of 18 without similarly punishing women who have sex with young males?

That question — one that revives the age-old debate about the different standards society applies to sexual conduct of males and females — will be resolved by the Supreme Court during the next year.

In a surprise move, the justices agreed Monday to review the constitutionality of California's statutory-rape law, which provides jail sentences of up to three years for anyone convicted of intercourse with a consenting women under 18 who is not his wife. The state imposes no similar punishment upon women who have intercourse with consenting males under 18.

The California law is now being challenged by a man from Sonoma County, who contends that the provision amounts to an unconstitutional form of sex discrimination. He says the statute denies men the 14th amendment guarantee of the equal protection of the laws.

That argument was rejected by the California Supreme Court last year. The state court, noting that pregnancy among teenaged girls is "a major contemporary human problem," decided 4 to 3 that the California legislature was "amply justified" in outlawing sex with females under 18.

In recent years, statutory rape laws similar to California's have been subjected to challenges in at least nine other state and federal courts. Until Monday, the Supreme Court had stayed out of the controversy.

But the court has become increasingly willing to examine claims of sex discrimination. On Monday, in a brief order, the justices scheduled a round of arguments next fall on the constitutionality of the California statutory-rape law.

According to Gregory F. Jilka, the lawyer who has challenged the California law, 31 other states have already passed "gender-neutral" statutory rape provisions.

Flight plan alters

LONDON (Reuter) — Six countries have agreed on new flight patterns over the North Atlantic to save airlines $8.8 million a year in fuel costs and operating time, the British Civil Aviation Authority announced today.

The authority said the changes were agreed on by Britain, the United States, Canada, Portugal, Ireland and Iceland, which provide air traffic control services on the North Atlantic.

It said that from Oct. 30 airliners would be able to fly within 60 nautical miles of each other laterally at the same flight levels instead of the present 120-mile separation, and 10 minutes behind each other instead of 15 minutes.

Soviets lay waste Kabul outskirts

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — Soviet warplanes, tanks and mortars laid waste to villages surrounding Kabul in an all-out bombardment to thwart a rebel attack on the Afghan capital, reports said today. At least 1,000 guerrillas were reported killed and 2,000 wounded.

"The rebels are dying so fast they have been forced to give up their Moslem custom of burying their dead," villagers near Kabul told a traveler following the awesome bombardment.

But reports said some insurgents slipped into Kabul to challenge Soviet control of the city the Russian troops have occupied since their invasion of the southwest Asian nation in December.

One report said at least 1,000 rebels had been killed in the Soviet bombardment that began Monday and inflicted "widespread devastation" on villages in the foothills surrounding the mile-high capital. Estimates said up to 2,000 rebels were wounded.

Reports also surfaced of the defections by Soviet Moslem soldiers, including officers, from the Soviet Union's Central Asian republics. A rebel spokesman said 48 Soviets had defected throughout Afghanistan, but 43 were killed by over-emotional rebels who suspected a plot.

Thousands of Afghan government soldiers have defected to the rebel side, but there were no reports of Soviet soldiers attempting to change sides.

Observers said if the Soviets cannot rely on their Central Asian soldiers, it will hamper their attempt to combat the intensified rebel pressure on Herat, Kabul, Jalalabad and other Afghan cities, observers said.

In the fighting, Moslem "holy warriors" shot down one Soviet bomber and a helicopter gunship in quick succession 18 miles north of Kabul at Shakardara, rebels in Pakistan said.

Despite their heavy casualties, hundreds of guerrillas were believed lurking inside the city to stir up trouble for the Soviet occupiers.

Radio Kabul said 140 students from Soriya Lycee in the capital were rushed to hospitals after "the black imperialist American agents and regional reactions and Chinese servants used poisonous gas to attack them Monday."

Anti-Moscow Afghan students have been boycotting classes and the gas attack, the second in two days, could have been the work of the guerrillas or their allies.

Internal row worrying Khomeini

TEHRAN (UPI) — Ayatollah Khomeini said today he was worried about "conspiracies" hatched by opponents of his regime and disunity among his aides that had left Iran "in chaos."

The 80-year-old Islamic leader made the remark following sharp public differences between President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and fundamentalist religious leaders over the appointment of a prime minister.

Khomeini said he was not worried about the course of his movement to overthrow the shah since he launched it in 1963 up to its victory. "But now I am worried," he said.

Khomeini said he was worried about "what the opponents are doing (and) their conspiracies. (But) this is not important.

"What is important is the incompatibility that exists in the Islamic governmental organs," Khomeini said, citing differences to the level of governors.

It was the first time Khomeini had spoken so openly about the differences and the first time he came out with his thoughts on the lack of unity cited often by President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr.

Khomeini also said officials must "make compromises with each other so that we can lead this country, which is in chaos.

"But, unfortunately, we see that anywhere we put a hand there are differences."

Telling revolutionary officials to guard the Islamic revolution, Khomeini said, "The masses of people came out and did the job. Now it is up to all of you — all of us — to protect what they achieved.

"The masses cannot any longer govern the nation," Khomeini said without elaborating on how he intended to interpret his thoughts in the Islamic republic.

Complaining about his aides, Khomeini said, "They all invite (each other) to collaboration but they themselves don't have agreement. This is worrisome, because this causes continued instability in this country."

Khomeini warned that if the instability persisted, the regime would be damaged from within. "It would not be necessary that they come from abroad to harm us."

Colonel Sanders gets leukemia

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Colonel Harland Sanders, the founder of Kentucky Fried Chicken, is suffering from acute leukemia, the company said in a release today.

"If this can be beaten, I'll beat it," the 89-year-old Sanders said when told of the diagnosis, the company statement said.

The disease was diagnosed after Sanders was admitted to hospital for treatment of pneumonia, which developed two weeks ago after an overseas business trip, the release said.

He was reported in satisfactory condition at a Louisville hospital and was "feeling pretty good," company spokesman John Cox said today.

Communists falter in Italy

ROME (UPI) — Italy's Christian Democrats scored a major electoral victory over the Communists, snatching away two of their prized regions and ending a campaign that threatened the government of Premier Francesco Cossiga.

The Communist losses, coupled with setbacks in national elections last year, have frozen for years their hopes of entering the national government, analysts said.

The Christian Democrats and their major supporters, the Socialists, won gains in most of Italy in two-day regional elections that ended Monday, thwarting a Communist attempt to turn the balloting into a personal vote against Cossiga.

The Christian Democrats won 10 of the 15 regions that voted, including two former Communists domains, industrial Piedmont and Roman Lazio.

With 99 percent of the vote for regional governments counted, the Christian Democrats led with 36.7 percent, a 1.4 percent increase from similar elections in 1975.

The Communists, led by Enrico Berlinguer, were behind with 31.6 percent, down 1.8 percent from 1975 and 0.2 percent from 1979.

The Socialists, Italy's third-largest party and currently the Christian Democrats' major supporters, won 12.7 percent.

VDTs affect health - study

NEW YORK (AP) — A group of office workers who operate video display terminals reported significantly more health complaints than a control group that did not use the terminals, a new federal study says.

The complaints ranged from eye problems to muscular aches to fatigue, according to the study by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health.

The institute also checked for radiation leaks, but none was detected in 67 terminals tested at the Blue Shield office in the San Francisco area, where the survey was conducted.

The study was requested by the AFL-CIO Office and Professional Employees International Union, which released the survey results Monday.

According to the report, questionnaires were given to 102 VDT operators and a control group of 110 clerical workers who do not use VDTs at the Blue Shield office.

The response rate was 72.5 per cent for VDT operators and 38.2 per cent for control subjects. The VDT workers reported significantly higher levels of health problems in three areas:

— Eye problems, including eye strain, blurred vision, burning eyes and lack of color perception. Many complained of problems related to glare.

— Muscular and bone problems, including neck pain, sore shoulders, pain in the arms and legs, neck pressure, neck pain into shoulders, swollen muscles, sore wrists, hand cramps, numbness and loss of arm strength.

— Psychological problems, including fatigue, anxiety, depression and confusion.

John Kelly, president of the AFL-CIO organization, said workers belonging to the 120,000-member union in the United States and Canada will be asking management for more rest periods and less pressure from superiors.

Fans heap honors on Statlers

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — The Statler Brothers have some kind of love affair going with their fans.

For the last decade, fans have consistently voted them the Vocal Group of the Year in the Music City News Country Awards. But the quartet was treated to an extra dose of acclaim during the 14th annual awards show Monday night at the Grand Ole Opry House.

After accepting the top vocal group award for the 10th year, their second honor of the evening was announced — best comedy act.

But when award No. 3 of the evening was presented, best album for the Statlers' The Originals, the matter had gone beyond routine and, at least for a moment, beyond quips. "God bless you," said Don Reid simply.

The Statlers — Lew DeWitt, Phil Balsey and the Reids — were big winners in the awards, presented on the basis of voting by country music fans responding to a survey in the Nashville-based Music City News magazine.

Marty Robbins, who was nominated in nine categories, took home the top male artist and best songwriter awards, and didn't forget to thank the fans.

Loretta Lynn, country music's coal miner's daughter, beat out her sister, Crystal Gayle, in winning the award for top female artist. Miss Lynn also shared the best duet award with Conway Twitty.

"Loretta's not here and she always does the talking," said Twitty in accepting the award.

The Charlie Daniels Band was named Band of the Year at the awards, in which about 10,000 fans voted. Daniels and the five members of the troup, decked out in full cowboy gear, tromped up to the stage to accept their award. Daniels dedicated his award to Tommy Caldwell, a member of the Marshall Tucker Band who was killed in an automobile accident recently.

Kenny Rogers, who also did not show, won best single honors for Coward of the County, a song about a prisoner's son who finally breaks a promise to his dad to "walk away from trouble when you can."

Charly McClain broke down in tears as she accepted her Most Promising Female Artist of the Year plaque. "This is my first big award," she said, her voice beginning to crack. "Thank you so much."

Hank Williams Jr., son of an historic figure in the industry, won the most promising male award. Roy Clark was voted best instrumentalist, Bill Monroe took the bluegrass group award, and the Carter Family won the gospel group award.

Drama awards to Shushwap

COURTENAY (CP) — The Shushwap Theatre Society from Salmon Arm has captured four of 13 awards at the provincial drama festival here for its production of Oscar Wilde's play, A Woman of No Importance.

The society won a technical award for best scenery and costumes while three members, Patrick Benson, Bridie Cassidy and Agnes Rudden received acting awards.

Two members of the Nanaimo Theatre Group, Gwyneth Evans and David Smith, won acting awards.

Acting awards were also given to Lindy Meadows and Bruce Teggart of the Lake Windermere Players and to Mary Bondal and Don MacKay of the North Vancouver Community Players. Gena Stockdale of Delta's Act One Players also received an acting award.

Technical awards were won by the Salt Spring Players for set design and by the Wonderland Players of Prince George.

Lighter bursts over Pryor

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Comedian Richard Pryor, the upper half of his body critically burned by a cigarette lighter that exploded in his hand, has only a 35 percent chance of surviving the third-degree burns.

The 38-year-old entertainer was in critical condition today at Sherman Oaks Community Hospital's burn ward, where he was rushed by paramedics shortly after the butane lighter exploded Monday night.

"Mr. Pryor sustained a serious 50 percent total body surface burn over his hands, chest, abdomen, back and face," said Dr. Jack Grossman. "He is in critical but stable condition at this time."

Grossman said the comedian has third-degree burns over the entire upper half of his body, adding that "only 25 to 35 percent of the people in his age group survive burns that extensive."

Police said Pryor's clothing became engulfed in flames at his home in nearby Northridge.

"A neighbor apparently heard commotion and made the call to police," said Sgt. H.J. DeLong. Authorities were unable to provide details on how or why the lighter exploded.

Fire Department paramedics picked up Pryor, who was sprawled in front of his house on Parthenia Street in the northern San Fernando Valley. Pryor, engulfed in flames, apparently had run into the street and collapsed.

Pryor's motion picture credits include The Wiz, Silver Streak, Which Way Is Up?, Blue Collar, Greased Lightning, Car Wash, The Bingo Long Traveling All-Stars and Motor Kings, Lady Sings the Blues and Uptown Saturday Night.

Pryor recently completed Wholly Mosses, due out this month; Stir Crazy with Gene Wilder, and Family Dream with Cicely Tyson.

He co-authored the movie Blazing Saddles with Mel Brooks, and he also wrote scripts for television's Sanford and Son and The Flip Wilson Show.

Pryor won Grammys for three of his comedy albums — That Nigger's Crazy, Was it Something I Said? and Bicentennial Nigger.

World Bank's McNamara to step down

WASHINGTON (AP) — Robert McNamara, the former U.S. defence secretary who has been president of the World Bank since 1968, announced today he will resign from the bank post next year.

McNamara informed the board of directors of the 135-country bank that he plans to step down effective June 30, 1981, when he will be age 65. He said that is the traditional age of retirement from the post.

McNamara proposed in a statement that a search committee be established to choose a successor. Traditionally, the president of the World Bank is an American, but McNamara indicated he did not feel this was a necessary qualification for the post.

McNamara was one of the so-called whiz kids in the administration of President John F. Kennedy. As defence secretary from 1961-1968, he played a key role in the prosecution of the war in Vietnam, both under Kennedy and later under President Lyndon B. Johnson.

McNamara, who turned 64 today, is serving his third five-year term as president of the World Bank, which annually gives billions of dollars in aid and loans for development probjects in poor countries.

Under McNamara, the bank has become the world's chief dispenser of aid from wealthy countries to the underdeveloped world. He has been outspoken in declaring that wealthy countries must do more to relieve worldwide poverty and starvation.

There has been some criticism both from within and without the bank that not enough attention has been paid by the bank under McNamara's tutelage to assuring that bank assistance was being provided for viableand worthwhile projects.

The U.S. has traditionally provided between 30 and 40 per cent of bank financing, although this amount has diminished steadily in recent years.

Bombs explode in Tel Aviv

The Associated Press

Two bombs planted by Arab terrorists exploded in a Tel Aviv suburb today, and the city's police warned that Palestinian guerrilla organizations might be planning a letter-bomb blitz. Meanwhile, President Carter's plan to resume the talks on Palestinian autonomy appeared to be moving forward.

One bomb was planted at a military pickup point in Peah Tikvah for soldiers travelling to their base, and the second in a garbage can in the town, about 10 kilometres from Tel Aviv.

Authorities reported no injuries or damage.

Egypt has accepted Carter's proposal that Egyptian and Israeli negotiators meet in Washington to try to break a month-long deadlock in the Palestinian autonomy talks. Israel has said it may send its negotiator to Washington this week, but has not commented directly on Carter's offer.

In another development, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said his country will stop building settlements on the occupied West Bank after one batch more is completed.

"The next batch of settlements will be the last settlements. This is the end of our settlement policy. We will (only) enlarge the population of the present settlements."

Begin said the settlements are "a defence line against the terrorists who come to kill our people."

He repeated Israeli assertions that the settlements are not illegal.

"We are not foreigners to the land. It's all (Judea and Samaria) the land of our forefathers," Begin said. "Our settlements are legal. We have a perfect right to settle . . . it is part of (Israel's) internal security."

Meanwhile, U.S. State Secretary Edmund Muskie urged Israel and Egypt to work for a political climate that would aid the talks. However, Muskie also denounced the new Israeli settlements on the West Bank of the Jordan as disrupting chances for an agreement on the future of the Palestinians living there.

"If negotiations are to succeed, no party should take steps on its own that prejudge the outcome," Muskie said in his first speech on the Middle East since becoming state secretary last month following the resignation of Cyrus Vance.

MD sues hospital for $2M

BALTIMORE (AP) — An eye surgeon who sued Johns Hopkins Hospital has been awarded $2 million in the largest malpractice judgment ever granted in Maryland.

Dr. James Lehninger, formerly of Baltimore, who contended an improper diagnosis of a hip injury prevented him from practising his profession, was granted the judgment Monday by a city jury.

Lehninger, 34, currently is researching aspects of eye surgery under a fellowship at the University of Texas. He told the jury he will lose an estimated $1.4 million in income because he cannot pursue his career as an opthalmologic surgeon.

The suit stemmed from a 1971 fall on a ski slope at Blue Knob, Pa., while Lehninger was a student at the Hopkins Medical School, said evidence presented in the case.

The day after the fall, Lehninger's injured hip was x-rayed at the hospital and he was told to walk with a cane, said lawyer Marvin Ellin.

Three days later, Lehninger fell again. X-rays showed that his hip apparently had been fractured when he fell on the ski slope. After an operation, Lehninger was pronounced sound in 1973, Ellin said.

After he began his post-graduate work in California, Lehninger once again experienced hip pain and underwent additional surgery in 1977. Ellin said his client now is waiting to be fitted with an artificial hip.

Ellin said Lehninger's second fall on a patch of ice was caused by the failure of Hopkins's personnel to diagnosis the first x-rays properly.

Opening lead — king of diamonds.

Good defense is not really difficult if you approach the play carefully. Most defensive errors are usually due to a failure to view the play of the hand as a whole.

Let's assume you're East, defending against four hearts. Partner leads the king of diamonds and, when dummy appears, you should feel that there's a reasonable chance to defeat the contract. This is because the dummy, aside fronm its trumps, does not pose much of a threat.

You signal with the seven of diamonds, asking West to continue the suit and hoping to snatch three diamond tricks right away. But declarer ruffs the next diamond lead and you must now revise your thinking so that your goal to win four tricks can be met in some other way.

Declarer plays a trump to the ten and then leads a club from dummy. If you follow low, in line with the rule of second-hand-low, you will later regret it. South plays the jack of clubs and West the ace, but the battle is practically over. Declarer soon leads another club from dummy. You win with the king and return a spade, but South makes the contract after he wins the spade with the ace and discards the queen of spades on his queen of clubs.

Note that if you go up with the king on the first club lead from dummy and return a spade, South goes down one. Furthermore, that's the play you'd make if your earlier thinking had followed the proper channel.

After declarer trumps the diamond at trick two, it is clear that your side must win three tricks in the black suits to stop the contract. If South has the A-Q of clubs, your king is dead anyhow, so rising with the king of clubs will do you no harm. But if West has the club ace, and a spade trick besides, going up with the king will defeat the contract.

No ducking from U.S. electoral daffiness

By WALTER STEWART
FP News Service

WASHINGTON — The world is full of delightful oddments — pantyhose, the infield-fly rule and the U.S. electoral college, to name three.

Pantyhose and the infield-fly rule affect only portions of the population, while the electoral college is a form of daffiness that could plunge the United states into chaos come November.

It could even make John Anderson president. Or Walter Mondale.

To understand why, it is necessary to know that when Americans cast their ballots for president on Nov. 4, they will not be voting for Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan or whoever appears on the ballot. Rather, they will be plumping for an unnamed elector, unseen and unsung, chosen for the party slate at primaries or state conventions.

The electors meet in state capitals on Dec. 15 and vote, according to the state wide results, with the verdict duly reported to Congresss on Jan. 6.

They follow the unit rule; whichever candidate gets the most votes in any state carries all that state's electoral votes. A one-ballot margin can produce 45 electoral votes in the most populous state, California, or three votes in any of the six smallest states.

To become president, a man must have an absolute majority in the electoral college. Since each state has as many electors as representatives in Congress, there are 538 electors in all — 435 for the House of Representatives, 100 for the Senate and three for the District of Columbia.

Ergo, to become president, the candidate must collect 270 electoral college votes.

Normally, that presents no problem; the two-party system is so firmly entrenched in the U.S. that the presidential contest usually involves only two main contenders, and a majority comes automatically with victory.

The last effective third party caper was Theodore Roosevelt's Bull Moose Party run in 1912 which split the Republicans and gave the White House to the Democrats; since then, the system has sagged occasionally but delivered in the end.

This year, however, there could be a fly in the ointment. His name is John Anderson.

Anderson is running at or above 20 per cent in public opinion polls and refusing to fade. That is because he represents what his backers like to call "the Anderson difference," but what is really the cheesed-off factor.

People who are so appalled by the prospect of a choice between Reagan and Carter that they are unwilling to stay home — the usual practice of malcontents — may instead turn out to vote for the Illinois congressman with the large glasses, grim smile and unshakable self-righteousness. (He told one rally, "God is my campaign manager." Beats having Nancy Reagan call the shots.)

If Anderson wins even a handful of states, there may be no electoral college majority, and if that happens the vote will be thrown into Congress with results that are impossible to predict. The House will choose a president and the Senate a vice-president, following different sets of rules.

In the House the choice must be made from the top three contenders — Carter, Reagan and Anderson. Each state delegation has only one vote, so there must first be a secret poll to cast that vote. If the poll produces a tie in any state, that delegation loses its vote.

But the presidential candidate must win 26 votes, one more than half the states. At the moment, Democrats control 29 state delegations, Republicans 12 and the rest are evenly divided. However, it is the House elected in November that will do the voting, which may be quite different from the present one.

It may well prove impossible for any candidate to gain the required majority.

In the Senate, a vice president must be chosen from the top two contenders. Each senator has a single vote. The Democrats, who own a handy majority in the Senate, will almost certainly keep it, since only one third of the Senate seats are up for grabs this fall. The Senate, if it has the chance, is almost certain to pick Walter Mondale for vice president.

But who will be president? Well, it all depends.

The constitution allows only a single round of ballots in the Electoral College, but says nothing about when Congress has to make up its mind.

In 1800, it took the House 36 ballots to elect Thomas Jefferson over Aaron Burr. (Burr went into a sulk, killed Alexander Hamilton in a duel, and was tried for treason later on. Politicis is serious stuff).

Under the electoral college system a man can become president with fewer popular votes than his opponent and three men have done so.

John Quincy Adams was chosen by the House in 1824 over Andrew Jackson, who got more popular votes.

Rutherford B. Hayes was named president, although he received fewer votes than Samuel Tilden in 1876, when the electoral college results were disputed. They were suspected, quite rightly, of having been cooked on Hayes' behalf and a commission had to sort out the mess. It went for Hayes anyway.

In 1888, Benjamin Harrison won the electoral college vote although he lost the popular vote to Grover Cleveland.

With this kind of tomfoolery in its background, the Electoral College may well reach a stalemate in 1980, followed by a stalemate in the House.

In that case the vice-president — presumably Mondale — would become acting president and could hold the job until another round of congressional elections in 1982.

Or, the House might get tired of knocking Carter and Reagan against each other and go for Anderson.

Or, Anderson might use his position to strike a deal with either of the other two candidates.

Or, almost anything.

While the law says electors must vote for the man who wins their state, it provides no punishment for refusing to do so, and electors have frequently broken ranks to plump for someone else.

In fact, the Electoral College might do enything that enters its pretty head.

Two facts suggest that this chaotic scenario must be taken seriously.

The first is that in the year of the low voter turnout all bets are off. A shift of 10,000 votes in Ohio and Hawaii in 1976 would have given the presidency to Gerald Ford, even though Carter had 1.5 million more votes.

The second is that the Democrats have just set up a $225,000 fund for legal stunts to keep Anderson off the ballot.

White House press secretary Jody Powell dismisses the Anderson threat as a "fantasy," but that's a heap of money to use fighting a fantasy. A number of people a lot smarter than Powell think the system could go off the rails.

The Electoral College, the root of the problem, was created because the Founding Fathers had an innate distrust of direct democracy. George Mason said it for all of them: "It would be as unnatural to refer the choice of a proper character for Chief Magistrate to the people as it would to refer the trial of colors to a blind man."

Since then, the vagaries of the college have become manifest, and there is common agreement with the American Bar Association's complaint that the present system is "archaic, undemocratic, complex, ambiguous, indirect and dangerous."

However, just as Canadians may agree that our constitution should be patriated, but can't agree on how to do it, Americans have been struggling with this problem since 1797 when the first suggestion for the direct election of presidents was made.

So, while Americans know who are the odds-on favorites for president — Carter and Reagan — only God knows who'll be in the White House next January.

Wartime casualty laid to rest

COPENHAGEN (UPI) — Australian Flight Officer Hugh McLean was laid to rest Tuesday along side his Canadian, British, and Danish comrades in a quiet corner of the World War II cemetery — 35 years after he died.

Six officers of the Royal Air Force carried him to his grave as a seventh officer sounded the Last Post.

McLean died when his plane crashed into the sea off the coast of Denmark while on a routine patrol during the night of Feb. 25, 1945. But the aircraft was not found until late last year when a Danish fishing boat hauled up the wreckage of a Halifax bomber, with McLean's body still in the cockpit.

Only a skeleton and a gold watch remained, but it was enough to identify the long lost airman.

Get a plant for father?

In earlier times, the traditional gifts that doting daughters and sons presented to their dads on Father's Day were shaving kits, pipes and slippers but today's liberated man has found this list considerably expanded to the point where it even includes houseplants.

Perhaps not the showy, floral types that mom receives on Mother's Day, birthdays, and other such occasions but plants nevertheless — and often it's with the decor of his office, shop or plant in mind. Next Sunday is the big day and this is an opportune time to consider some of the gift plants that might just ring the bell with your husband or father.

The first consideration, I suppose, is to settle upon a plant that's pleasing to the eye but at the same time will tolerate neglect. It's only natural that a plant in a busy office, store or factory isn't going to get the same kind of tender, loving care that is usually bestowed upon one in the home and there's also the factor to consider that many such premises are abandoned for a couple of days each week — perhaps even longer during staff holidays.

There are also lighting, air circulation and humidity problems to consider but still there are many plants which will tolerate such conditions and thrive despite the constant neglect of their owners and a sometimes hostile environment.

My husband has always been particularly partial to jade trees so last year I got him one for his office as a birthday gift. He set it on a book case opposite a large window where it received direct sun for the early afternoon and ample natural light throughout the day. This handsome specimen is especially suitable for it needs to be watered only once every 10 days to two weeks.

Also great for a sunny or paritally sunny spot is the weeping fig, various types of cacti, sweet bay, the wax-leaf privet or even a pineapple plant. None of these requires daily or even weekly waterings and many of the cacti can go for a month without such ministration.

Many offices and shops don't have that much direct natural light but there's no shortage of attractive plants that will thrive in just medium light four to five feet from a natural light source. There's the Madagascar dragon tree, for example, or Kangaroo ivy, the large lady palm, Kentia palm, split-leaf philodendron, schefflera, stripe-leaf Dracaena or the tree philodendron.

Also numbered among these is the familiar rubber tree, long a popular standby in Canadian homes. This native of Asia is most adaptable to virtually any situation and about the only thing that really bugs it is overwatering, in which case it tends to go leggy. The beauty of it is that in an office it isn't likely to suffer this indignity.

Something a little off the beaten track would be a beefsteak begonia which prefers three to four hours of direct sun in the winter, less in summer, and a temperature range of 14 to 22 degrees. It's durable but does need to have its soil kept moist and it should be misted often, which may be a mite too troublesome in a working place situation (who says the home isn't a working place?). Another factor is that these plants grow spindly and may die unless repotted every year or two so perhaps this one should only be given an ardent green-thumber.

Some offices tend to be a trifle stark and well-arranged groups of foliage plants can have a considerable softening effect, say against an otherwise austere wall. One office I visited recently had a most effective display in a row of palms set in trays of white pebbles.

For the very formal office, a large wooden planter box planted with dieffenbachia and dracaena can provide a strong accent. An ordinary wooden bench can be cut with holes to fit assorted pot sizes to liven up a wall decor using plants of varying heights and shapes.

Actually, I can imagine that giving a plant for Father's Day that is especially suitable for offices, stores or factories could result in his fellow workers receiving similar gifts in the future and their work places gradually taking on a whole new character and becoming a much more congenial place in which to labor.

Get a plant for father?

In earlier times, the traditional gifts that doting daughters and sons presented to their dads on Father's Day were shaving kits, pipes and slippers but today's liberated man has found this list considerably expanded to the point where it even includes houseplants.

Perhaps not the showy, floral types that mom receives on Mother's Day, birthdays, and other such occasions but plants nevertheless — and often it's with the decor of his office, shop or plant in mind. Next Sunday is the big day and this is an opportune time to consider some of the gift plants that might just ring the bell with your husband or father.

The first consideration, I suppose, is to settle upon a plant that's pleasing to the eye but at the same time will tolerate neglect. It's only natural that a plant in a busy office, store or factory isn't going to get the same kind of tender, loving care that is usually bestowed upon one in the home and there's also the factor to consider that many such premises are abandoned for a couple of days each week — perhaps even longer during staff holidays.

There are also lighting, air circulation and humidity problems to consider but still there are many plants which will tolerate such conditions and thrive despite the constant neglect of their owners and a sometimes hostile environment.

My husband has always been particularly partial to jade trees so last year I got him one for his office as a birthday gift. He set it on a book case opposite a large window where it received direct sun for the early afternoon and ample natural light throughout the day. This handsome specimen is especially suitable for it needs to be watered only once every 10 days to two weeks.

Also great for a sunny or paritally sunny spot is the weeping fig, various types of cacti, sweet bay, the wax-leaf privet or even a pineapple plant. None of these requires daily or even weekly waterings and many of the cacti can go for a month without such ministration.

Many offices and shops don't have that much direct natural light but there's no shortage of attractive plants that will thrive in just medium light four to five feet from a natural light source. There's the Madagascar dragon tree, for example, or Kangaroo ivy, the large lady palm, Kentia palm, split-leaf philodendron, schefflera, stripe-leaf Dracaena or the tree philodendron.

Also numbered among these is the familiar rubber tree, long a popular standby in Canadian homes. This native of Asia is most adaptable to virtually any situation and about the only thing that really bugs it is overwatering, in which case it tends to go leggy. The beauty of it is that in an office it isn't likely to suffer this indignity.

Something a little off the beaten track would be a beefsteak begonia which prefers three to four hours of direct sun in the winter, less in summer, and a temperature range of 14 to 22 degrees. It's durable but does need to have its soil kept moist and it should be misted often, which may be a mite too troublesome in a working place situation (who says the home isn't a working place?). Another factor is that these plants grow spindly and may die unless repotted every year or two so perhaps this one should only be given an ardent green-thumber.

Some offices tend to be a trifle stark and well-arranged groups of foliage plants can have a considerable softening effect, say against an otherwise austere wall. One office I visited recently had a most effective display in a row of palms set in trays of white pebbles.

For the very formal office, a large wooden planter box planted with dieffenbachia and dracaena can provide a strong accent. An ordinary wooden bench can be cut with holes to fit assorted pot sizes to liven up a wall decor using plants of varying heights and shapes.

Actually, I can imagine that giving a plant for Father's Day that is especially suitable for offices, stores or factories could result in his fellow workers receiving similar gifts in the future and their work places gradually taking on a whole new character and becoming a much more congenial place in which to labor.

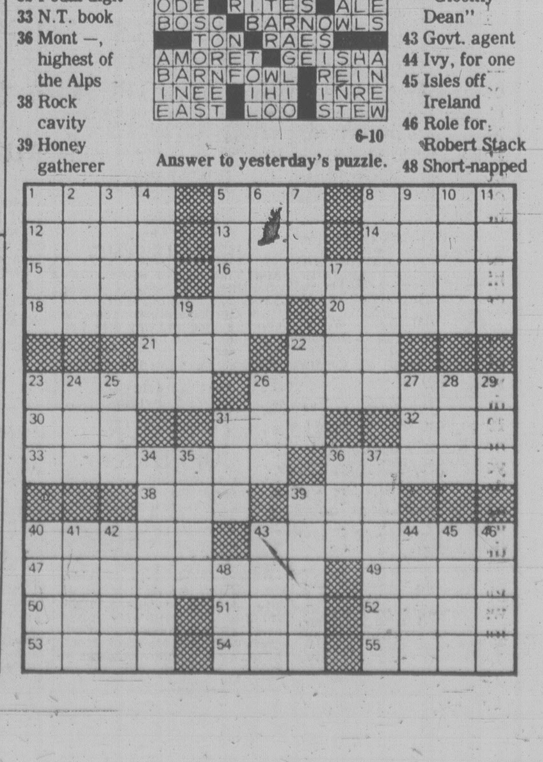
Answer to yesterday's puzzle.



No ducking from U.S. electoral daffiness

By WALTER STEWART
FP News Service

WASHINGTON — The world is full of delightful oddments — pantyhose, the infield-fly rule and the U.S. electoral college, to name three.

Pantyhose and the infield-fly rule affect only portions of the population, while the electoral college is a form of daffiness that could plunge the United States into chaos come November.

It could even make John Anderson president. Or Walter Mondale.

To understand why, it is necessary to know that when Americans cast their ballots for president on Nov. 4, they will not be voting for Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan or whoever appears on the ballot. Rather, they will be plumping for an unnamed elector, unseen and unsung, chosen for the party slate at primaries or state conventions.

The electors meet in state capitals on Dec. 15 and vote, according to the state wide results, with the verdict duly reported to Congresss on Jan. 6.

They follow the unit rule; whichever candidate gets the most votes in any state carries all that state's electoral votes. A one-ballot margin can produce 45 electoral votes in the most populous state, California, or three votes in any of the six smallest states.

To become president, a man must have an absolute majority in the electoral college. Since each state has as many electors as representatives in Congress, there are 538 electors in all — 435 for the House of Representatives, 100 for the Senate and three for the District of Columbia.

Ergo, to become president, the candidate must collect 270 electoral college votes.

Normally, that presents no problem; the two-party system is so firmly entrenched in the U.S. that the presidential contest usually involves only two main contenders, and a majority comes automatically with victory.

The last effective third party caper was Theodore Roosevelt's Bull Moose Party run in 1912 which split the Republicans and gave the White House to the Democrats; since then, the system has sagged occasionally but delivered in the end.

This year, however, there could be a fly in the ointment. His name is John Anderson.

Anderson is running at or above 20 per cent in public opinion polls and refusing to fade. That is because he represents what his backers like to call "the Anderson difference," but what is really the cheesed-off factor.

People who are so appalled by the prospect of a choice between Reagan and Carter that they are unwilling to stay home — the usual practice of malcontents — may instead turn out to vote for the Illinois congressman with the large glasses, grim smile and unshakable self-righteousness. (He told one rally, "God is my campaign manager." Beats having Nancy Reagan call the shots.)

If Anderson wins even a handful of states, there may be no electoral college majority, and if that happens the vote will be thrown into Congress with results that are impossible to predict. The House will choose a president and the Senate a vice-president, following different sets of rules.

In the House the choice must be made from the top three contenders — Carter, Reagan and Anderson. Each state delegation has only one vote, so there must first be a secret poll to cast that vote. If the poll produces a tie in any state, that delegation loses its vote.

But the presidential candidate must win 26 votes, one more than half the states. At the moment, Democrats control 29 state delegations, Republicans 12 and the rest are evenly divided. However, it is the House elected in November that will do the voting, which may be quite different from the present one.

It may well prove impossible for any candidate to gain the required majority.

In the Senate, a vice president must be chosen from the top two contenders. Each senator has a single vote. The Democrats, who own a handy majority in the Senate, will almost certainly keep it, since only one third of the Senate seats are up for grabs this fall. The Senate, if it has the chance, is almost certain to pick Walter Mondale for vice president.

But who will be president? Well, it all depends.

The constitution allows only a single round of ballots in the Electoral College, but says nothing about when Congress has to make up its mind.

In 1800, it took the House 36 ballots to elect Thomas Jefferson over Aaron Burr. (Burr went into a sulk, killed Alexander Hamilton in a duel, and was tried for treason later on. Politicis is serious stuff).

Under the electoral college system a man can become president with fewer popular votes than his opponent and three men have done so.

John Quincy Adams was chosen by the House in 1824 over Andrew Jackson, who got more popular votes.

Rutherford B. Hayes was named president, although he received fewer votes than Samuel Tilden in 1876, when the electoral college results were disputed. They were suspected, quite rightly, of having been cooked on Hayes' behalf and a commission had to sort out the mess. It went for Hayes anyway.

In 1888, Benjamin Harrison won the electoral college vote although he lost the popular vote to Grover Cleveland.

With this kind of tomfoolery in its background, the Electoral College may well reach a stalemate in 1980, followed by a stalemate in the House.

In that case the vice-president — presumably Mondale — would become acting president and could hold the job until another round of congressional elections in 1982.

Or, the House might get tired of knocking Carter and Reagan against each other and go for Anderson.

Or, Anderson might use his position to strike a deal with either of the other two candidates.

Or, almost anything.

While the law says electors must vote for the man who wins their state, it provides no punishment for refusing to do so, and electors have frequently broken ranks to plump for someone else.

In fact, the Electoral College might do enything that enters its pretty head.

Two facts suggest that this chaotic scenario must be taken seriously.

The first is that in the year of the low voter turnout all bets are off. A shift of 10,000 votes in Ohio and Hawaii in 1976 would have given the presidency to Gerald Ford, even though Carter had 1.5 million more votes.

The second is that the Democrats have just set up a $225,000 fund for legal stunts to keep Anderson off the ballot.

White House press secretary Jody Powell dismisses the Anderson threat as a "fantasy," but that's a heap of money to use fighting a fantasy. A number of people a lot smarter than Powell think the system could go off the rails.

The Electoral College, the root of the problem, was created because the Founding Fathers had an innate distrust of direct democracy. George Mason said it for all of them: "It would be as unnatural to refer the choice of a proper character for Chief Magistrate to the people as it would to refer the trial of colors to a blind man."

Since then, the vagaries of the college have become manifest, and there is common agreement with the American Bar Association's complaint that the present system is "archaic, undemocratic, complex, ambiguous, indirect and dangerous."

However, just as Canadians may agree that our constitution should be patriated, but can't agree on how to do it, Americans have been struggling with this problem since 1797 when the first suggestion for the direct election of presidents was made.

So, while Americans know who are the odds-on favorites for president — Carter and Reagan — only God knows who'll be in the White House next January.

Wartime casualty laid to rest

COPENHAGEN (UPI) — Australian Flight Officer Hugh McLean was laid to rest Tuesday along side his Canadian, British, and Danish comrades in a quiet corner of the World War II cemetery — 35 years after he died.

Six officers of the Royal Air Force carried him to his grave as a seventh officer sounded the Last Post.

McLean died when his plane crashed into the sea off the coast of Denmark while on a routine patrol during the night of Feb. 25, 1945. But the aircraft was not found until late last year when a Danish fishing boat hauled up the wreckage of a Halifax bomber, with McLean's body still in the cockpit.

Only a skeleton and a gold watch remained, but it was enough to identify the long lost airman.

Miami blacks pelt Carter

Times News Services

MIAMI — President Carter's motorcade was pelted by bottles thrown by a mob of angry blacks Monday night as it left the Liberty City area swept by riots last month.

The president was not injured. He said later at Miami International Airport that he was unaware of the incident.

It was evident as Carter left the community centre where he had met Miami civic leaders that trouble was in the wind. The crowd of blacks outside began booing loudly as the president appeared and walked to his limousine under heavy Secret Service guard.

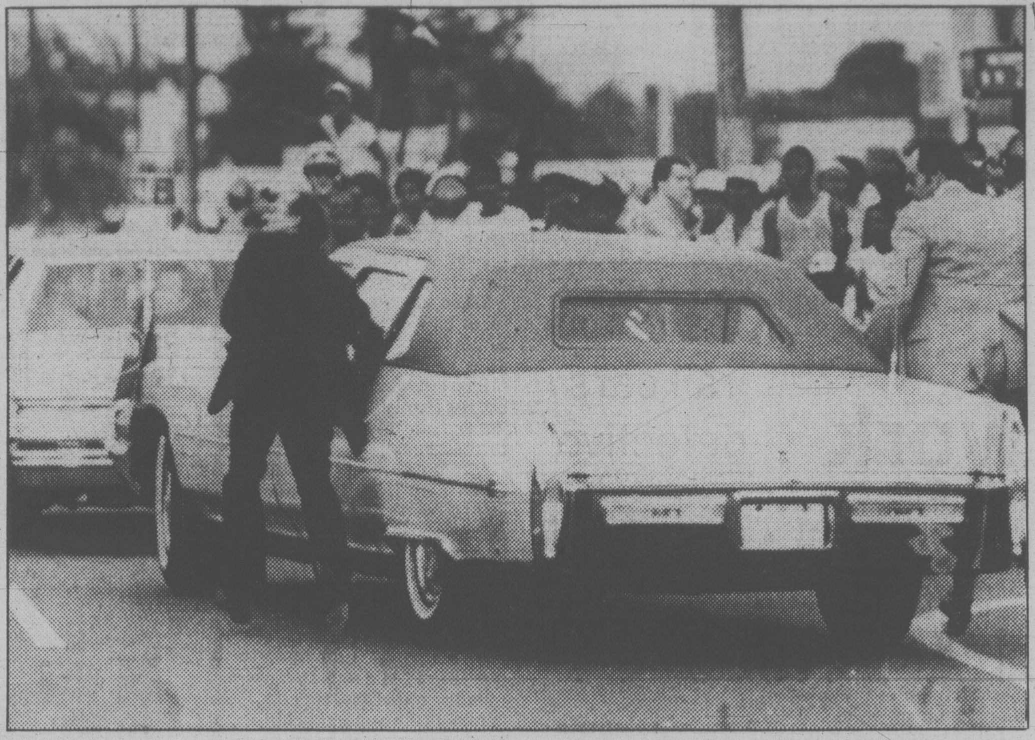
One beer bottle struck the armored limousine and other objects were thrown at the motorcade. Some of the objects were water-soaked wads of paper but more bottles struck vehicles behind Carter's.

It was the most visible and outspoken opposition Carter has faced in recent trips outside Washington.

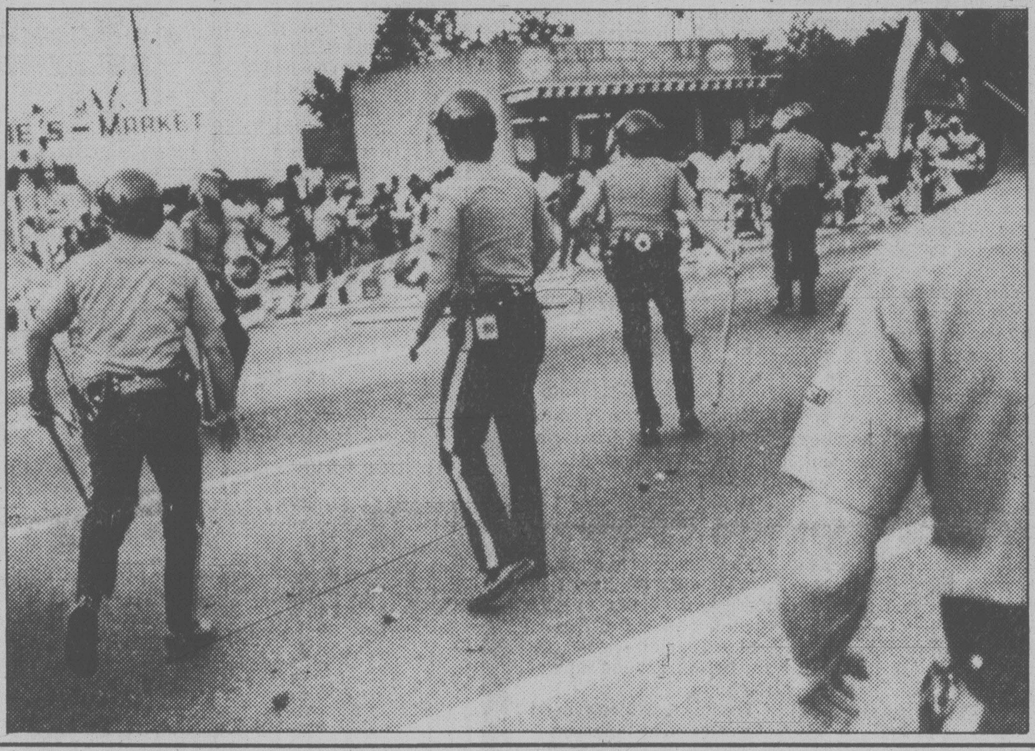
Later, as he boarded Air Force One for a flight to Seattle, Carter was asked if he had been aware of the bottle-throwing. He replied, "No."

Earlier, at the meeting with civic leaders, Carter promised them, "I'll meet you at least half way...if you'll meet me the other half way."

The session in the cramped Liberty City community center, with booing pickets outside, contrasted with the first appearance of Carter's four-hour visit to Miami — a talk before a friendly audience in the splendor of a hotel ballroom across Biscayne Bay in Miami Beach.



SECRET SERVICE agent ducks from the debris thrown by mob of blacks (above) as he runs beside Carter's limousine. Below, sheriff's deputies move in to disperse the mob.



St. Helens could be trigger for other volcanoes

Times News Services

Eruptions at other Pacific Northwest volcanoes may well follow the explosion of Mount St. Helens in Washington, the head of the U.S. Geological Survey said today.

USGS Director H. William Menard, testifying at Senate hearings in Washington, D.C., said eruptions at Mount St. Helens early in the 19th century were followed by activity at three other volcanoes — Mount Rainier and Mount Baker in Washington and Mount Hood in Oregon.

"It is possible the current Mount St. Helens eruption could signal the start of similar cycle of eruptions," Menard said.

Menard said Mount St. Helens was active between 1831 and 1857.

"The only prudent thing we can do now is to assume it will remain active for the same length of time," he said.

Meanwhile, scientists watching quiet Mount St. Helens are looking with trepidation toward Friday — the day a theory about the effects of the moon's gravity on volcanoes will be tested. And as luck would have it, it's also Friday the 13th.

On that day, the moon will be the closest to the earth since May 17, a few hours before the cataclysmic volcanic eruption that tore more than 1,300 feet off the top of the mountain.

Dr. Doug Johnson, a University of Washington geophysicist, is one of several scientists who say there is a possibility the moon's effect on earth tides could trigger another eruption.

Geologist Tim Hait of the U.S. Geological Survey says he has no evidence to show the mountain will change its current relatively calm appearance by Friday.

He said, however, there is always the possibility that the volcano's magma may build new explosive pressure and cause a blast.

Donal Mullineaux, considered one of the foremost volcano experts among the USGS crew, also said the tide could act as a triggering force. But, added Mullineaux, "we simply don't know."

"It doesn' matter to me that it's Friday the 13th. We're going to be watching just because we think the volcano is in an explosive mood and it's highly dangerous," Mullineaux said.

Seismic activity near the mountain was practically undetectable Sunday. Seismologists had to turn their machines up high to record faint tremors.

The Weyerhaeuser Company reported an "earthquake" at 4:10 a.m. PDT after loggers five miles east of Camp Baker said they felt the ground shaking, but University of Washington seismologists detected no noticeable change in activity.

The relative calm, the slight plume activity and evidence that some vegetation was springing back to life in the 150-square-mile blast area around the volcano were welcome signs.

Loggers were permitted inside the state's newly designated Red Zone extending 20 miles around the mountain for the first time Sunday after the state Department of Emergency Services granted firms single permits covering all their workers.

Weyerhaeuser, which owns thousands of acres around the mountain, and other logging companies have been anxious to enter the potentially dangerous area to salvage abandoned equipment, rebuild logging roads.

Meanwhile, Skamania and Cowlitz County coroners said they hoped to schedule hearings this week that eventually would lead to issuance of "certificates of presumptive death" for many persons missing.

Hydro backs off on 2,4-D plans

By BRENDA DALGLISH

B.C. Hydro has withdrawn its controversial application to use 2,4-D along its transmission lines between Sooke and Jordan River.

It was learned today Hydro has informed the B.C. Pesticide Control Branch it wants to "reassess" its application.

The notification is in a letter to be delivered to the branch later today from Peter Mosby, vegetation management supervisor for Hydro.

The request comes in the face of increasing protests from the community and a suggestion the utility be charged for including false information in its application.

A Hydro spokesman said vegetation in the area still needs to be controlled but the company wishes to take another look at the situation.

Four residents and the Sooke-Jordan River Chamber of Commerce were appealing Hydro's application. The appeal was to be heard by the Pesticide Control Branch appeal board at the Sooke Royal Canadian Legion Hall June 16 and 17.

Both groups were protesting what they considered false information in Hydro's application.

The residents, who live in the area to be treated, claim Hydro's information about setback from water intakes was wrong.

Opponents of the spraying suggested Hydro be prosecuted under the Pesticide Control Act which says intentionally making a false statement or misleading the administrator is punishable by a $2,000 fine or six months imprisonment or both.

The chamber protested the application because of what officials considered the false and insufficient information, and a number of other reasons.

The chamber wanted alternatives for brush and stump control examined.

Hydro's application called for 200 acres to be treated to control brush and stump growth by backpack sprayers from June 1, 1980, to March 31, 1981. The application said no more than 240 pounds of 2,4-D would be used.

Street level aid for dropouts

A $3,000 start on portable counselling of school dropouts was endorsed Monday by Greater Victoria school trustees.

The money will be used for a career counsellor and office accommodation, or a mobile van and counsellor to assist dropouts, school-aged youngsters in part-time work or on public assistance, and those on the loose such as street children.

"I think it's the first time the Victoria school district has got out of its shell to where the clients are," said superintendent Allan Stables, an originator of the plan.

The effect is to move school expertise to street level, rather than expect youngsters needing guidance to come to the administrative centre.

The summer downtown counselling project has the support of area police chiefs, Stables said. He indicted businessmen are also enthused and may be willing to subsidize it in some way such as through donated facilities.

A downtown centre was proposed to augment the district's telephone counselling service, which has been reasonably successful and which would be maintained through a downtown location.

Stables said the service would be aimed at youngsters who have drifted away from the school system in a variety of ways.

Ferry runs cut, delayed

A number of ferry sailings were cancelled and others delayed by an hour today as crew members joined other public sector employees in a protest of proposed pension plan changes.

There were six mid-day ferry sailings cancelled on the Swartz-Bay Tsawwassen run and two on the Horseshoe Bay-Departure Bay route. Six sailings on the latter route were delayed.

It was the second disruption of ferry service between Vancouver Island and the mainland in less than a week.

Last Friday, a protest rally was held in Nanaimo, and ferry sailings from Departure Bay were delayed.

Today's rally was held in Vancouver.

Municipal and provincial government offices were affected and liquor stores were closed for the afternoon in the Greater Vancouver area as employees left to attend the rally.

A similar rally is planned for next Monday in Victoria and it is expected the liquor stores will be closed here as well and there will be further ferry disruptions on the Swartz-Bay-Tsawwassen run.

The public sector employees are protesting proposed amendments to pension statutes which would put an end to open-ended pension plan indexing.

Garbo's kiss makes rose worth $1,650

SALISBURY, England (Reuter) — A faded yellow rose once kissed by Greta Garbo was sold at auction today for $1,650.

It was one of the cherished souvenirs of Sir Cecil Beaton, photographer of royalty and international celebrity, who died in January.

Swedish-born actress Greta Garbo, the love of his life, gave the rose to him in 1932. According to Beaton's published diaries, he vainly proposed marriage to her several times.

Success or catastrophe: Trudeau

By DAN TURNER
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau offered his retirement as an incentive to overcoming Canada's constitutional quagmire Monday, but judging from the pronouncements of various premiers he may be in office for a long time to come.

Trudeau and the ten premiers met for seven hours behind closed doors for seven hours in an attempt to get started on constitutional reform.

They emerged with a negotiating timetable aimed at a five-day first minister's conference to begin Sept. 8, but the most optimistic thing most of the premiers could say about the meeting was that there was a new sense of urgency about constitutional reform in the wake of the Quebec referendum.

Trudeau said he couldn't define whether the meeting had been a success or a failure.

"I almost feel like telling you it's not certain that everything will go as we all hope. It might be a monumental success or a catastrophic failure . . . it just depends on how much progress is made during the summer, and how it will be capped in September by the first ministers."

But deeply-held differences on the nature of confederation in general, and federal-provincial power-sharing in particular, remained as evident as ever, particularly on the part of Quebec Premier Rene Levesque and Newfoundland Premier Brian Peckford.

Equally obvious was a basic difference between Trudeau and most of his provincial counterparts on how to approach reform.

Trudeau was pushing for step-by-step progress that would begin with "building blocks" — such as a statement of fundamental principles, entrenchment of human rights and patriation of the constitution — while several premiers were holding out for quid pro quo bargaining every step of the way.

Referring the the 12 priority items laid down for negotiation over the next three months, Trudeau said "if we do reach agreement on all these things I would be very, very anxious to retire soon."

"Now that," he told reporters with a smile, would be an incentive to a lot of people, I would think."

Trudeau said that if the first ministers could make progress on the whole package "that's fine and dandy," but hoped that if there were not that degree of success there would at least be progress on his "building blocks," or "package for the people."

Behind his stated hopes remains the veiled threat mentioned by several prominent members of his government during the last week — that if sufficient progress is not made Trudeau may attempt to push his own version of constitutional reform through Parliament and go to the electorate in a referendum.

Premier Richard Hatfield of New Brunswick described Levesque as positive and co-operative inside the meeting, but when the

TOWN TALK

A bolt snapped and down splashed the end of the ferry ramp at Long Harbour on Salt Spring Island Saturday. Unfortunately, it was just before the Queen of Sidney arrived at 10 p.m. on her last run of the day from Tsawwassen.

As ramp attendants struggled to reposition the ramp manually so the ferry could berth, Capt. Ian McLean followed custom and offered the 77 passengers aboard a little something during what turned out to be an hour-long wait.

Now the announcement by the captain in such circumstances usually specifies tea or coffee. In this case Capt. McLean simply offered "refreshments."

Seconds later passengers were helping themselves to sandwiches, pie, cake and anything else not nailed down in the cafeteria display cases. Rather than risk a riot, the crew was advised to let it ride.

One of the most swinging parties in town took place on the quarter deck of the Japanese training ship Katori Monday night.

Young officers, immaculately dressed in white uniforms, introduced guests that included Rear-Admiral Michael Martin, commander maritime forces Pacific, Esquimalt Mayor Ken Hill and Victoria alderman Bill McElroy to raw fish delicacies and other Japanese gourmet items.

The Katori and the destroyer Okigumo are here to mark the 100th anniversary of the first Japanese ship to visit Victoria and if you closed your eyes you could believe you were back in the days of the old British empire.

Guests guzzled and nibbled as the ship's band played Land of Hope and Glory and when it was time to go, the Japanese did it well.

The young officers lined up to bid their guests farewell and the band played — you guessed it — Auld Lang Syne.

Jack, who with co-writer wife Hilda has just retired after 30 years of column tips to Times readers, is in Victoria General Hospital taking it easy for a spell.

"He'd love to see a familiar face," says Hilda, who added that visits should be brief and that cards and letters are equally welcome.

If and when the Maritime Museum's plans for a new waterfront location come to pass, there will be a fascinating exhibit as centrepiece — a working boatyard.

Director Capt. Keith Cameron says the museum recently acquired Henry Vollmers' boatyard in Nanaimo, a family-owned establishment which sent more than 140 wooden fishboats and other pleasure yachts down the ways at the mouth of the Millstone River.

The museum is in the middle of moving tools and machinery from Nanaimo to Victoria. Wooden casting forms, hand tools, hull models, C-clamps of various sizes — all of them made byhande in Vollmers' shop — are already at Bastion Square. Next to come will be the larger belt-driven machinery.

The firm was started in the early 1890s by Vollmers' father at Spotlight Cove at the north end of Galiano Island. He moved it to Nanaimo in 1908.

Sealand of the Pacific's sea lion Bonnie, except for misfortune, would have pulled off an amazing record on the weekend.

For the third year in succession the eight-year-old sea lion gave birth on June 7, but this time her 23-pound male pup was mysteriously stillborn. An autopsy will determine why.

To stop her grieving Bonnie was immediately reunited with her mate, Clyde, and Bonnie is now back in the show where her two earlier June 7 pups, Popeye and Sinbad, had been filling in during her maternity leave.

Saanich's core turning to slum

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Once upon a time Saanich municipal planners labored and brought forth a vision of a vibrant, people-filled downtown area along the narrow, banana-shaped strip of land between Vernon and Seymour.

A 1978 civic core study was considered the planning department's crowning achievement.

"I believe this plan provides the guidelines that can make a Saanich dream come true," chief planner Gil Laurenson said then.

Two years later the area destined to become the cultural, institutional and social centre of the district is turning into a slum, pitted with barely-started construction sites and unkempt, boarded-up houses.

Developers, for a number of reasons, are not interested in Saanich's civic core.

The reasons include three lanes of fast-moving traffic surrounding the core area, high development costs and a current surplus of office space.

The politicians who embraced the vision are getting worried.

"Nobody is even talking about making things happen. There's absolutely zilch going on," Mayor Mel Couvelier said.

Mayor calls for review

The mayor has called for a review of the civic core concept.

"If no development is happening and the area is going downhill rapidly then it must be uneconomic," he said.

Earlier this week Couvelier asked the Greater Victoria Real Estate Board to help planners rework their idealistic, people-oriented concept into a more practical land-use proposal.

However, Laurenson feels the dream is still very much alive — all it needs is time to become a reality.

"Long-term planning is the key if we want to see the dream fulfilled," he said last week.

The planner says he is a little afraid council may succumb to a short-term compromise that will harm the development of the core.

No amount of manoeuvring will change the fact the development market is not good right now, he said.

"I think we're not going to be able to pull any rabbits out of hats . . . that's the truth of it," Laurenson said.

"It looked as though everything was going to gel and then the bottom fell out of the market."

A current surplus of office space indicates development activity in the core may not take place for some time.

'Maybe it has to lie fallow'

"Maybe it has to lie fallow for a while until the market picks up."

Laurenson agrees with other planning experts who say locating the new police station and regional health office in the civic core would have been a good idea.

Council decided recently to put both buildings on Quadra.

Laurenson also suggested a provincial government office in the core could help spur development.

And he predicted the severe rental accommodation crisis will eventually force senior government to subsidize apartment construction in areas like the civic core.

A section of the core has already been zoned and serviced for apartment use.

Meanwhile, the few remaining homeowners trapped in the core are resigned to a long wait.

William Houston bought his home at 885 Verson 29 years ago. Rick Stevens purchased what he thought was a nice home at 881 Vernon in 1975.

Both are are faced with taxes that have doubled and a neighborhood that is falling apart.

They wear earplugs to sleep

"My wife and I have to wear earplugs to sleep at night and the dog is afraid to go for a walk," Stevens told the Times.

Both said they accepted attractive offers from Quecbec-based Campeau Corporation when it announced multi-million dollar plans to expand Town and Country shopping centre into the core.

The announcement touched off a flurry of buying and selling inside the core until Campeau made a second announcement cancelling development plans because of high land prices.

"From our point of view it was like winning a sweepstakes and having them announce it was a mistake," Stevens said.

Campeau's withdrawal scuttled other development proposals, including a hotel-theatre complex at one end of the strip.

Most of the 49 properties inside the core are still zoned for single-family homes.

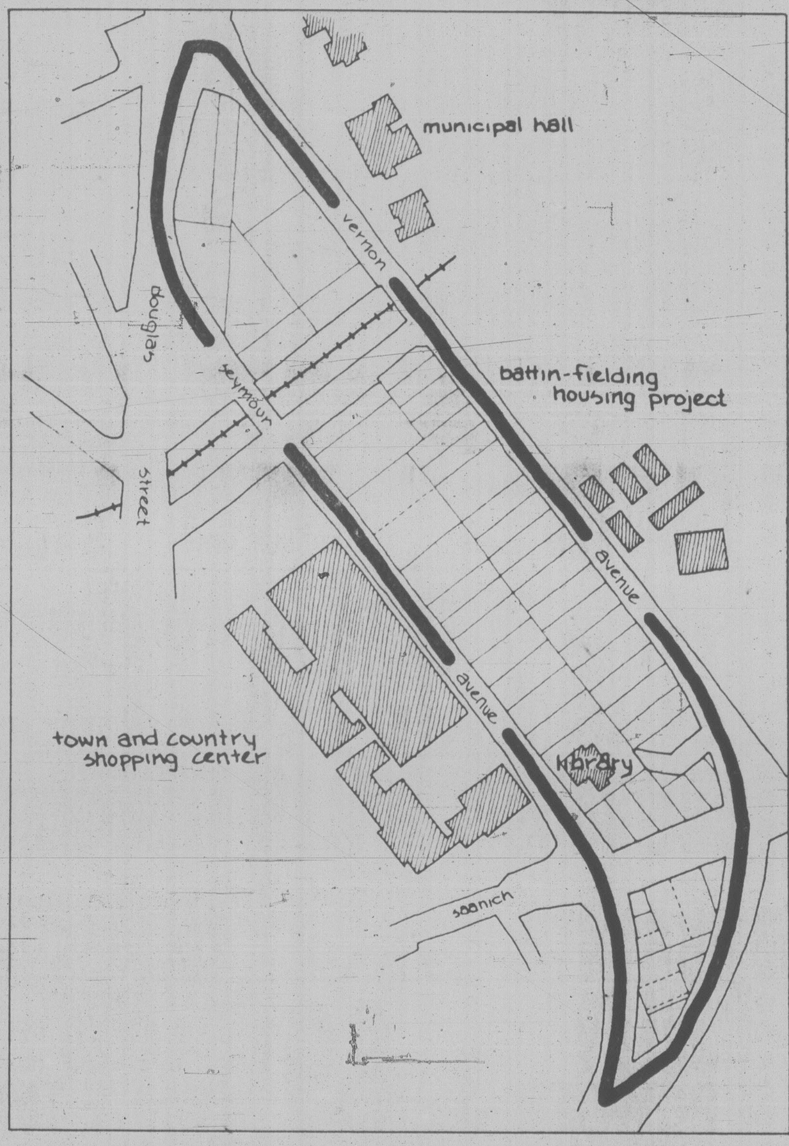
The properties are held by 14 owners — a mixed bag including developers, speculators, real estate companies and the provincial government.

The only construction taking place in the core was halted recently.

Builder Sarjeet S. Johal said work stopped on his office complex because he can't find tenants.

The real estate board's industrial, commercial and investment committee plans to meet as soon as possible with the property owners to discuss development problems and alternatives.

"At this point we're trying to get some suggestions. We haven't studied the project," said committee chairman, realtor Bill Fife.



The banana-shaped dream is coming unpeeled

Resthaven hotel bid rejected

A proposed Prime Enterprises Ltd. hotel-apartment-condominium complex on the old Resthaven Hospital site was turned down by Sidney town council Monday night.

Ald. Ross Martin summed up council's feelings when he labelled the proposal "overkill."

Councillors didn't care for a commercial project of such magnitude in what is basically a residential area.

Market foes fear pests

Opponents of a farm produce market proposed for Blenkinsop Road painted a picture Monday of rats and wasps feeding on waste from the operation and invading their homes.

Pests were one of several objections voiced by a handful of people who spoke against the rezoning application during a public hearing at Saanich municipal hall.

The application was to rezone property at Blenkinsop and McKenzie from rural to rural-farm market use.

The proposed aluminum-sided structure would be an eyesore and create traffic problems, residents charged.

Council voted to adjourn the hearing until July 7 and ask for a report from the traffic committee.

Municipal staff will discuss a development permit to set down landscaping guidelines with the owner of the property.

Mayor Mel Couvelier said he is serious about preserving the rural nature of the Blenkinsop Valley.

"And the best way to do that is by putting an agricultural use on the property," he told aldermen.

Ald. Sandy Noel, who approved the marketplace concept, said the owner has been paying taxes on that property for a number of years and should be able to use it.

"I don't know how far we can go turning down applications," he said.

In other business, Couvelier announced work has begun on the first Royal Oak industrial park project.

The ground-breaking ceremony for the $6 million Gray Beverage bottling plant was held Monday afternoon.

Council also approved a request by developers Broadmead Farms Ltd. to alter the Royal Oak community plan to include its entire 713-acre land holding.

Company vice-president Merv Mawson said a small part of Broadmead is inside the Cordova Bay community plan area, making it inconvenient for the company to attend all planning meetings.

Oak Bay man dies in mishap

A man killed when his pickup truck struck a culvert and overturned Sunday afternoon at Bowser north of Qualicum has been identified as Collin Edward Arndt, 28, of 870 St. Patrick, Oak Bay.

Glenna Ewing, 21, of Nanaimo, was a passenger in the truck and the Jaws of Life had to be used to free her from the wreckage.

She was taken to Nanaimo Regional Hospital and transferred to Victoria General Hospital on Monday. She is reported in poor condition.

Parksville RCMP said the Arndt four-wheel drive truck was southbound on rain-slicked Highway 19 when it went out of control near the Royal Canadian Legion building at Bowser.

The vehicle struck the right shoulder, skidded across the highway and hit a culvert.

Police said the truck vaulted into the air and landed on its roof, demolishing it and trapping Arndt and Ewing inside.

CFRE outlines finance, program plans

The directors of the CFRE Public Broadcasting Society meet today with the deputy ministers of education and science, universities and education to give the provincial government financial and programming details of their plan for a Victoria TV station on Channel 10.

Their 30-page brief proposes that CFRE lease the unused CBC building at Kings and Blanshard. Ideally, the CBC would lease it directly to the society, the brief states.

If the corporation continues with its announced plans to sell, then CFRE hopes the city and province could buy it and lease it back to the organization, with CFRE's eventual aim to repurchase from the governments. CFRE estimates the building will cost $2 million.

CFRE outlines a proposed first-year operating budget of $2.4 million and when fully developed, the station would employ 80 fulltime people on a budget of $4.8 million. CFRE is hoping for government funding to cover 35 per cent of its budget.

It aims to sell $5 memberships to 20,000 people and raise $1 million from further public donations and corporate contributions. Special fund raising events would bring in another $275,000.

Programming concepts suggested in the brief include a morning show called Western Wakeup from 5 a.m. to 9 a.m. weekdays, including weather reports, news, nutritional and shopping information, rental listings and physical education instruction.

There would also be a nightly one-hour News Journal and on Saturdays a six-hour film festival of Canadian and imported movies starting at 9 p.m.

CFRE would aim for 40 per cent locally-produced programs and 70 per cent Canadian content at all times.

Chevron suit against Home dismisssed

CALGARY (CP) — A Court of Queen's Bench judge has dismissed a suit filed by Chevron Standard Ltd. against Home Oil Co. Ltd. for allegedly using trade secrets concerning the lucrative West Pembina oil field in Alberta.

Chevron filed the suit after one of its senior officials joined Home. Both companies have substantial interests in West Pembina, Alberta's most important oil discovery in more than a decade.

In a judgment released this week, Mr. Justice W. K. Moore said Home conducted its business "in a fair manner in a competitive industry and did so without seeking and without the benefit of information which might have been confidential to Chevron Standard Ltd."

New York

Oil issues set the pace as the stock market staged a modest advance today.

Among actively traded oil stocks, Gulf Oil was up ⅝ to $43⅜, Exxon rose 1 to $66⅝, Standard Oil of Indiana 1⅛ to $57, Texaco ¼ to $37, and Mobil ⅝ to $77⅜.

At a meeting in Algiers, oil ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries were reported still unable to agree on a single base price. One delegate said the ministers agreed on the need to cut production, but Saudi Arabia said it would not go along without such an accord on pricing.

Interest rates, meanwhile, have recently resumed their steep slide, putting yields on U.S. short-term government securities at their lowest levels in more than two years.

The decline is considered positive in many respects for the stock market, particularly since it has steadily reduced the appeal of interest-bearing investments that compete with stocks for investors' funds.

But analysts say it has also resulted in new pressure on the U.S. dollar in foreign exchange, and contributed to worries about just how severe the recession will be.

Among Canadian issues on the NYSE, Campbell Red Lake Mines fell 1¾ to $39¼, Dome Mines 1¾ to $77½, McIntyre Mines 1½ to $72, Inco ¼ to $22⅜ and Seagram Co. ¼ to $54¾.

Canadian Pacific rose ¼ to $36¼.

London

OPEC bumps oil prices $2

Times News Services

ALGIERS — OPEC oil ministers agreed today to reunify prices and sell their oil at $32 U.S. ($37 Canadian) per barrel for the next three months.

The Persian Gulf states and Arab moderates are raising their prices immediately by $2 a barrel, although Saudi Arabia, the largest of the 13 producers in the cartel, has not announced when it will hike the price of its oil, currently at $28 per barrel.

"We have all agreed that the marker crude should be $32 per barrel," Iranian Oil Minister Ali Akbar Moinfar told reporters after the ministers ended their afternoon meeting.

Industry analysts had said a $32 price would increase the cost of gasoline and home heating oil to North American consumers by between 2 and 3 cents a gallon.

"Thirty-two dollars," Moinfar said, "would be the floor price for OPEC crude and each country would be permitted to add on to that up to $5 in premiums."

The agreement, he said, will last for three months.

Moinfar said Saudi Arabia will hike its prices from $28 to $32 "in one step" but added that they may not do it immediately.

And Iran would, for the time being, maintain its price at $35 a barrel.

Earlier, it appeared the 13 countries would not be able to come to an agreement on pricing, as increasingly bitter squabbles rent the organization.

Iran and Iraq got into a shouting match at the meeting Monday night, Qatar stalked off and Saudi Arabia stayed away.

Venezuelan Oil Minister Humberto Calderon Berti at one point said he thought achieving unified prices here would be "impossible."

Sources said that Iranian Oil Minister Ali Akhbar Moinfar accused Iraq and Saudi Arabia of "serving American imperialism by raising production rates."

They said Iraqi Oil Minister Tayeh Abdel-Karim shouted back that Iraq was the first power in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to nationalize Western-owned oil operations.

The sources said Saudi Arabia's minister did not even attend and Qatar's walked out of the hall in the middle of the session. However, all 13 ministers met later to take up the pricing issue in detail.

Iraq and Iran are at ideological odds and recently have engaged in sporadic fighting along their shared border. Iran accuses Iraq of being a stooge of the United States.

Saudi Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani recently predicted oil prices will collapse by fall because of reduced demand caused in part by the U.S. recession.

Members of the organization have not been able to agree on a uniform pricing policy since February, 1979. Several previous efforts to restore uniformity have failed, most recently at the organization's meeting last December in Caracas, Venezuela.

At the end of last year, the average price for OPEC oil was $25.50 U.S. (about $29.50 Canadian) a barrel, 37 Canadian gallons. Recent increases by individual members have pushed the average to almost $31 U.S.
